SKANDHA ELEVENTH

CHAPTER ONE

Sage's Curse : Imprecating the Annihilation of Yadu's Race.

Śrī Śuka (The Son of Bādarāyaṇa) said :

1. Accompanied by Balarāma and the Yādavas, Kṛṣṇa brought about the annihilation of the Daityas (some through Balarāma, some through Yādavas and the rest like Pūtānā, Kāṁsa, etc. himself). (In the case of near relatives whom he could not destroy personally) he (being the indwelling soul of all) instigated a fast-growing virulent feud (culminating in the war between Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas) and lightened the burden of the earth.

2. Using as his means (the cause of) Pāṇḍavas whose wrath was extremely (and frequently) provoked by their enemies (Kauravas) through fraudulent gambling, scornful insults, dragging (their queen Draupadī) by the locks of her hair and such other humiliating acts, the Lord removed the burden of the earth by causing the mutual destruction of the kings who assembled there (in Kurukṣetra) as allies on either side (as these were Daityas born as his relatives).

3. Having destroyed completely the kings and their armies which caused a burden to the earth through his Yādava clansmen who were protected by his arms, the Lord of incomprehensible nature (and boundless powers) pondered : “Though (apparently) the burden of the earth has been lightened, I do not consider it as really removed as long as the irresistible<sup>1</sup> clan of Yadus still continues to exist. (It will not be proper for me to annihilate personally my own clansmen openly).

4. Being always under my protection, this clan which has become unrestrainable through ever-increasing power and prosperity, can never be defeated (and destroyed) by others (even by gods). Having instigated an internal discord leading to their total (mutual) destruction like a forest of bamboos consumed by fire (sparked by their mutual friction), I shall retire quietly to my abode (Vaikuṇṭha)."

1. The existence of the powerful invincible, vast Yādava clan was intolerable to Lord Kṛṣṇa—EK.

5. Having made up his mind thus, the Almighty Omnipresent Lord of true, effective resolve, withdrew (to their respective places in the higher world) his own race, making the curse of Brāhmaṇas as the pretext (with a view to establish the greatness of Brāhmaṇas).

6-7. The Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa retired to his abode after captivating the eyes of persons with his superb personality which surpassed the world in beauty<sup>1</sup> (and made people's eyes unwilling to see anything else), and by his words he fascinated the hearts of those who remembered them, by his foot-prints he suspended the movements and actions of those who espied them (and had thus concentrically attracted to himself all the propensities of the people who saw him), and after having spread his glory all over the earth—his glory which can be sung in beautiful verses and which if heard or recited, people would easily cross over the darkness of Nescience and Samsāra.

King Parikṣit enquired :

8. How is it that the curse of Brāhmaṇas affected<sup>2</sup> the Vṛṣṇis who were devoted and friendly to Brāhmaṇas ; were extremely generous; always rendered services to elderly persons and had their minds devotedly attached to Kṛṣṇa.

9. What was the occasion of the curse ? What was its nature ? How could discord be sown among Yādavas who were of one mind ? Be pleased to narrate to me in details everything about this.<sup>3</sup>

Śrī Śuka explained :

10. Possessing a personality comprised of everything that is beautiful in the world, engaged in performing ideally

1. Or which imparted beauty to the world—ŚR.

2. Nārada used to stay at Dvārakā so that he should not be affected by Dakṣa's curse. If Dakṣa's curse was ineffective due to the presence of Kṛṣṇa in the case of Nārada, how could the Brāhmaṇa Sages' curse descend upon the Vṛṣṇis at all—EK. 1.280

3. EK. explains that the Will of Lord Kṛṣṇa to annihilate the Yādava clan is the real cause of the Brahmanical Curse (1.284-85).

auspicious acts even though he had all his desires accomplished, enjoying himself in his home at Dvārakā, the Lord of liberal wish-bestowing glory felt his mission still incomplete and desired to annihilate his own clan.

11-12. Having accomplished highly blissful and auspicious actions glorifying which bring merits and singing of which wipes out the dirt (sinfulness) of the Kali age, he stayed as Kāla (the God of destruction) in the house of Vasudeva, the Lord of Yadus. Sages such as Viśvāmitra, Asita, Kaṇva, Durvāsa, Bhṛgu, Aṅgiras, Kāśyapa, Vāmadeva, Atri, Vasiṣṭha, Nārada and others took leave of him and went to the (holy place) Piṇḍāraka.<sup>1</sup>

13. Youths of the Yādava clan who were playing there approached those Sages and though really impudent, they feigned to pay respects to their feet in mock humility, and put a question to them.

14-15. They dressed Sāmba, the son of Jāmbavatī in the clothes of a woman and said, “This dark-eyed damsel is pregnant and desires to ask you, O Brāhmaṇas—She feels shy of asking you directly. But She is desirous of having a son and will deliver soon. You are of unfailing vision. Be pleased to tell whether she will have a male or a female issue”.

16. O King ! The Sages who were thus being cheated (as a practical joke), got angry and replied, “O stupid fellows! She will give birth to a pestle which will exterminate your race”.

17. Hearing that (predictive curse), they became extremely terrified. They at once undressed the belly of Sāmba. And lo ! They found a veritable iron pestle in it.

18. “What folly have we—unlucky fellows—committed ? what will now people say to us ?” In such a perplexed mood, they went home, taking the pestle with them.

19. With pale, withered faces, they took it to the royal assembly hall. And in the presence of all Yādavas, they reported the whole matter to King Ugrasena (and not to Śrī Kṛṣṇa).

1. This is near Golagar, sixteen miles to the east of Dvārakā (Saurāṣṭra)—GDAMI, P. 157.

20. Learning of the unfailing curse of Brāhmaṇas and seeing actually the pestle, the citizens of Dvārakā were shocked with astonishment and were quaking with terror.

21. Āhuka (Ugrasena), the king of Yadus got the pestle reduced to powder and caused it scattered over the high seas and did the same to the remaining piece of the iron pestle which could be so reduced.

22. Some fish swallowed up that iron piece while the particles of the powder were borne by the sea waves to the shore where they grew into a kind of reed called Erakā.

23. (As Fate would have it) the fish (that swallowed the irreducible iron piece of the pestle) was caught in a net along with other fish in the sea, by some fishermen. The piece of iron found in the bowels of the fish was fixed at the point of his arrow by a hunter.

24. The glorious Lord Kṛṣṇa knew all the facts. The Supreme Ruler as he was, (he could have but) he did not wish to counteract (and render ineffectual) the curse of the Brāhmaṇas. He, being the Destroyer himself, approved of it (as he desired to exterminate the Yādavas).

CHAPTER TWO

Bhāgavata Dharma : Nārada's Narration of King Nimi's Dialogue with Jāyanteya and others

Śrī Śuka said :

1. In his ardent longing and eagerness to wait upon Kṛṣṇa, Nārada frequently used to stay at Dvārakā despite Dakṣa's curse of eternal wandering to him, as the curse was ineffective at Dvārakā which was protected by the arms of Lord Kṛṣṇa, O best of Kurus.

2. What person possessed of sound senses and hemmed in by death on all sides<sup>1</sup> would possibly neglect to resort to and adore the lotus-feet of Mukunda (for which possession of sense-organs only, and not caste (varṇa) and stage of life (āśrama) is the qualification, etc.) which are meditated upon and adored by the best of immortals (such as god Brahmā, Śiva and others).

1. VR. reads sarvato'mṛtyum 'in no way affected by death' and this adj. qualifies the 'lotus feet of Mukunda'.

3. On one occasion, when the divine sage Nārada visited his house and was duly worshipped and was comfortably seated, Vasudeva respectfully bowed to him and submitted as follows :

Vasudeva said :

4. “Just as the arrival of the parents is for bringing the well-being of the children or the movements of those great souls who follow the path of the Lord of excellent glory, are conducive for the good of the indigent and helpless, the movements of your worship are for the welfare of all embodied beings.

5. The working of the deities (e.g. showering of rains) may contribute either to the misery or happiness of created beings. But actions and behaviour of pious souls like you who have concentrated their minds on Lord Acyuta, tend exclusively and solely towards the happiness of all.

6. Deities (i.e. the grace they confer) depend on meritorious acts (such as sacrifices etc.). Like the shadow of a person (imitating him reciprocally), they serve their votaries in the same way as their devotees worship them with meritorious acts. But the pious and the righteous people are always kind and compassionate to the afflicted and needy under all circumstances.

7. We, however, request you, O Brāhmaṇa sage, to explain to us the paths of righteousness which lead to the propitiation of the glorious Lord and by listening to which with faith and devotion, a mortal being is emancipated from all fears (i.e. is liberated from Samsāra).

8. Formerly, in my previous incarnation in this world, I worshipped the Infinite Lord, the bestower of emancipation from Samsāra, with the desire of getting progeny but not for Liberation from Samsāra, as I was deluded by the Māyā (deluding potency) of the Lord.

9. O sage of well-observed vows ! Be pleased to instruct us to that course (in this life) whereby we shall directly and easily be liberated from the Samsāra teeming with various kinds of miseries and beset with fears and dangers on all sides.’’

Śrī Śuka said :

10. Solicited thus by the highly intelligent Vasudeva on this question, the divine sage Nārada being reminded of the excellent qualities of Hari, became pleased with him and spoke to him thus :

Nārada said :

11. “O foremost Sātvata ! Your honour has wisely resolved on this course, wherein you enquired of me, as to what courses of behaviour and virtues delight the Lord and purify all (from sins, etc.).

12. O Vasudeva ! This righteous course of conduct (viz. Bhāgavata dharma) if heard, recited, pondered over, accepted with reverence or appreciated approvingly (when followed by others), instantaneously purifies even those who are the enemies of gods or are hostile to all creatures.

13. The most auspicious and glorious Lord Nārāyaṇa whose name, if heard or sung is meritorious, is brought to my mind and memory to-day, by you.

14. On this point, this ancient historical legend is told. It consists of a dialogue between the sons of R̥ṣabha and the great-souled king Nimi of Videha.

15. Svāyambhuva Manu had a son by name Priyavrata. His son was Agnīdhra from whom was born Nābhi, whose son was well known as R̥ṣabha.

16. The knowers say that he was a ray (an aṁśa) of Lord Vāsudeva who had descended on the earth with the intention of propagating the righteous path leading to Mokṣa (Liberation from Samsāra). He had a hundred sons, all of whom were well-versed in the Vedas.

17. Out of them, Bharata, the eldest son, was exclusively devoted to Nārāyaṇa (the supreme soul). It is reported that this wonderful continent is known after him as Bhārata-Varṣa.

18. Having enjoyed the pleasures (of sovereignty) of this earth, he renounced it. He propitiated Hari by austere penance and it is reported that he attained to the Lord's abode after three births

19. Out of those hundred sons, nine became the rulers of the nine continents all around, and eightyone of them became Brāhmaṇas, authors of treatises on rites and rituals (and religious acts).

20. The remaining nine highly fortunate sons became sages, capable of propounding the highest truth. They exerted on the spiritual path, were sky-clad (naked)<sup>1</sup> (lit. wore girdle of the air) but were highly expert in the spiritual (ātmic) lore.

21. (Their names were : ) Kavi, Hari, Antarikṣa, Prabudha, Pippalāyana, Āvirhotra, Drumila, Camasa and Karabhājana.

22. They realised that this universe, both cause and effect or gross and subtle<sup>2</sup>, is nothing but the Glorious Lord

1. (i) They were without clothes, but not naked—VR.

(ii) EK gives a spiritual description of their nudity : 'They were clad in cidākāśa (sky in the form of Brahman). They tied the knot of the threads of Prāṇa and Apāna (inhalation and exhalation in respiration) at the navel, which resulted in untying the knot of their state as Jīva and it became their sacred thread (Brahma-Sūtra). —EB. 2.175-178

2. Sadasadātmakam : VR as usual interprets this as the conscious or intelligent and unconscious or unitelligent principles which constitute the body of the Lord and are inseparable from him.'

VJ. stoutly rejects the view of the identity between the universe and God or Paramātman, for the adj. sad-asadātmakam precludes it and the lakṣaṇa (jahad-ajahad) is not soundly authoritative. According to VJ : They realised that the nature of the Lord pervades all causes and effects, but is different and distinct from individual soul (jīva). The gross universe is also different from Hari (God). It is as the internal abiding soul (antaryāmin) that he pervades all and quotes as authority :

antar bahis ca tatsarvaṁ vidyāya Nārāyaṇaḥ sthitaḥ—Nar. Up. 2.

EK. gives a highly idealistic interpretation : Though their bodies were different, they were spiritually one. They looked upon all people as their own self. The sages have realized that there is nothing but Brahman everywhere, and the universes, beings or elements, due to their identity with Brahman, have no separate existence. To them the triad—the seer, the act of seeing and the thing seen was the Self itself. They were so absorbed in Brahman that they were not aware of movements, being, becoming, etc. In such a stage, their wandering over the earth took place.

himself and not distinct from their self (ātman), and ranged over the earth.

23. They were not attached to anything. They freely went about their way, as their paths were unobstructed. They wandered at will in the worlds of gods, Siddhas, Sādhyas, Gandharvas, Yakṣas, human beings, Kinnaras and serpents as well as in the spheres of sages, Cāraṇas, the lord of goblins, Vidyādharas, Brāhmaṇas and Go-loka.

24. On one occasion, by chance, they happened to attend<sup>1</sup> the sacrificial session of the noble-souled Nimi (the King of Videha) conducted by sages in the Bhārata Varṣa (known also as Aja-nābha).

25. On seeing those most ardent devotees of the Lord who were brilliant like the Sun, the sacrificer (King Nimi), (the presiding deities of) the sacrificial fires (viz. Gārhapatya, Āhavanīya and Dakṣiṇa<sup>2</sup>) and Brāhmaṇas (officiating as sacrificial priests)—all of them stood up to show respect.

26. On coming to know that they were staunch devotees of Lord Nārāyaṇa<sup>3</sup>, Nimi, the King of Videhas was greatly delighted. When they were comfortably seated, he worshipped them with all the formalities, according to their seniority.

27. The king who was highly pleased (with their visit), bowed low with great humility and submitted to them who were effulgent by their own personal lustre, like the mindborn sons of Brahma-deva (like Sanaka, Sanandana).

King Nimi of Videha submitted :

28. I believe you are direct attendants of the glorious Lord Viṣṇu (the slayer of demon Madhu); for the people (devotees) of god Viṣṇu are always on the move for purifying the people.

1. EK : They arrived there at the time of pārṇadhuti.

EB.2.195

2. These fire-deities were visible only to these nine sages to whom they paid respect—EK 2.201.

3. The Bh. P. gives a special place of honour to the devotees of Lord Nārāyaṇa "But of crores of siddhas who are free from attachment and have realised the self, a person who is absolutely devoted to Nārāyaṇa (Nārāyaṇa-paras) is very difficult to find"—Bh. P. 6.14.5.

29. To Jivas (embodied souls who are invested with a body in every birth) the attainment of human body (birth as a human being) ephemeral though it may be, is very difficult yet valuable (as it serves a means of liberation from Samsāra. Even in this rare (and transitory) form of existence, I consider that it is rarer still to meet persons beloved of Viṣṇu.

30. O sinless ones ! We, therefore, ask you about (the pathway to) the summum bonum. For in this worldly existence association with saints or the righteous, even for half a moment is like the find of a valuable treasure.

(Just as an ordinary person finds delight in obtaining a treasure, we get the Supreme delight in the company of saints).

31. If we are competent to listen to them, be pleased to expound to us those righteous duties and observances propitiatory to the Lord. So that the Eternal (birthless) Lord may be so pleased as to confer even his Self to the suppliant (devotee).

Nārada said :

32. Respectfully solicited by king Nimi, those worshipful sages complimented the king along with the priests (officiating over the sacrifice) and the members of the sacrificial assembly, and gladly spoke<sup>1</sup> to the king one by one as follows : O Vasudeva.

Kavi said :

33. I believe that uninterruptedly worshipping and meditating on the lotus-feet of Lord Viṣṇu is the surest and safest means of ensuring protection from fears from any quarter. In this samsāra, a man's mind gets always bewildered by the fear (of three types of miseries), caused by mistaking this

1. ŚR. quotes two couplets enumerating the following topics about which king Nimi raised the questions :

(1) Bhāgavata dharma; (2) devotees of the Lord; (3) Māyā; (4) Means of dispelling Māyā; (5) Brahman; (6) Karma Theory; (7) theory of re-incarnation; (8) jīva and vāsanās (9) Ti-ga-dharma.

extremely worthless body, etc. for the soul. But through the worship of the Lord, that fear is completely dispelled.<sup>1</sup>

34. For those means and courses of conduct which have been taught (prescribed) by the Lord, for easily attaining realization of the Self even by ignorant persons—Be sure that those are the duties which please him the most and lead easily to self-realization.

35. By betaking one's self to those paths, O king, no person will ever go astray. (This path is so safe and easy that) even if one runs with his eyes<sup>2</sup> closed (i.e. is ignorant of Śrutis and Smṛtis which are regarded as eyes) will not miss his path (and take the wrong way). (And even if he hurries across the path of devotion, jumping in haste from one step of Bhakti to another out of the nine steps (viz. Śravaṇa 'hearing the Name of the Lord', Kīrtana 'glorifying the deeds of the Lord', and others), he would not stumble (into Samsāra again or miss the fruit of his devotion).

36. Whatever a person does by his body, speech, mind, cognitive and conative sense-organs, intellect and ego and by the force of nature<sup>3</sup> (as formed by his previous karmas), he should dedicate all such<sup>4</sup> (voluntary and involuntary) acts to the Supreme Lord Nārāyaṇa<sup>5</sup>.

1. VR : All fear disappears when the Lord is meditated upon as the Indweller (Antaryāmin) of this entire universe consisting of the sentient and non-sentient (Viśvasya kṛtsnasya cid-acidātmakasya jagata ātmatvenā'ntarātmataḥ yatropāsane kṛte sati ityarthah).

2. "Śrutis and Smṛtis constitute two eyes of a Brāhmaṇa. One who does not know one of these (either Śruti or Smṛti is squint-eyed) but who knows neither is blind " Quoted by ŚR and others :

3. anusṛta-svabhāvat—SR. alternatively explains : Although the Soul is unconcerned with the body, unaffected by passions or untainted by external acts, owing to superimposition of ignorance, he forgets his essential blissful nature—regards himself as belonging to a particular caste, etc. All acts which this ignorant jīva performs, should be resigned to the Almighty Lord.

4. All acts prescribed, non-prescribed and prohibited by Śāstras—VR.

Cl.

yat karoṣi yad aśnāsi yaj juhoṣi dadāsi yat/yat tapasyasi Kāmteya, tat kuruṣva mad-arpanam//

—BG. 9.27

5. EK. in his learned com. (ovis 346-453) construes the verse differently: stating generally that acts voluntary, involuntary, prescribed by the Vedas,

37. Due to the force of the Lord's Māyā, loss of memory (of the real nature of the Self), misapprehension about one's real self (leading to the belief in the identification of one's physical body with the self—such as 'I am a god', 'I am a man' etc.) are caused in a person who has turned away from the Lord. When one identifies one's self with what is other than the Self (viz. one's body), it leads to fear (regarding other persons as enemies, friends etc. for he has lost the insight of seeing the Brahman—everywhere). Hence, a wise person should discern that his preceptor is the Deity and his own self and worship the Lord with unflinching, exclusive devotion till one is liberated from Samsāra.

38*. For, this duality called Samsāra has no real existence, but appears to be so like dreams (in sleep), and day-dreams or social duties or by force of nature as a consequence of one's acts in his previous birth—all such acts be dedicated to the Lord. This is the Bhāgavata dharma in a nutshell. EK takes every term from the text, explains it with illustrations how that act is to be resigned to the Lord. The realization of the coalescence or one-ness of the triad—The doer, the act of doing, and the thing done—(for example the seer, the seen and the act of seeing) is the way of dedicating the act to God. He illustrates this by applying the trinity formula to each sense. EK emphasizes that motionless physical posture in a trance is not the real samādhi. Such a trance is equivalent to swooning. Samādhi is an uninterrupted dedication of one's self to Brahman. Śrīkrṣṇa transported Arjuna to a supertrance and directed him to participate in the Mahābhārata war. The real propitiation of God is the natural, automatic, dedication of all our natural, voluntary and involuntary karmas to the supreme Brahman.

(i) SS. (Sudarśana Sūri) :

dvaya—The twin notions about the identity of the soul with the body and their independent existence distinct and separate from God's personality.

Karma—saṅkalpa—vikalpakaṁ manaḥ—

The Mind which under the powerful influence of karmas of the past lives broods over the anxieties for maintaining one's body, etc. (Saṅkalpa), and desires for obtaining enjoyment like flower-garlands, sandal-paste, etc. (vikalpa).

(ii) VR : Though the two notions viz. identity of the body and the Soul and the independent existence of oneself from God though unreal, are entertained in the mind like the dreams (in sleep) and fancies or hallucinations (in the waking state). Hence the necessity of controlling the mind which under the stress of the previous Karmas weaves out Saṅkalpa (Self—delusion about the identity of the body and the Soul) and Vikalpa (our indehallucinations (during wakefulness), on account of the mind of the persons who broods over it. A wise person should, therefore, control his mind which brings forth the ideations and doubts. It (devotion to God with controlled mind)<sup>1</sup> will lead to Fearlessness i.e. Liberation from Samsāra.

39. (As control of the mind is very difficult, an easier way to Mokṣa is enunciated.

Hence, one should (devoutly) listen to the highly auspicious (stories of ) the incarnations and deeds of Lord Kṛṣṇa, the wielder of the discus Sudaraśana, in this world. (If that too is impossible due to their being innumerable), he should sing the names signifying the descents and sportive acts of the Lord, without feeling fear or shame of being mocked at, and lead a life without attachment.

40. A person who adopted the above-described course of devotion as a sacred vow (to be strictly and constantly observed), develops an ardent love for the Lord by singing the names of his beloved Lord Hari. His heart is melted with love and devotion. He laughs loudly (feeling elated at winning over the Lord by his devotion), cries (feeling that he was neglected so long by the Lord), (out of over-eagerness) screams out ('O Lord ! Be pleased to be gracious unto me'), bursts out into songs (out of ecstasy) and dances like a mad person. Unconventional as he is, he transgresses the ways of the world.

pendence from the Supreme Soul on whom we are really absolutely dependent.)

(iii) VJ : The knowledge of Brahman is impossible to dawn unless one dedicates everything (including himself ) to the Lord and Mokṣa is attained through the knowledge of Brahman. Hence one should be exclusively and selflessly devoted to the Lord.

Sarva-samarpaṇa-lakṣaṇa'pāśanā'bhāve brahma-jñānaṁ na syāt, tadabhāve saṁsāra-nivṛttir na syāt/ atas tad artham sarva-samarpaṇa-lakṣaṇam upāśanaṁ kartavyam iti bhāvah/

EK. For control of one's mind, complete faith in the spiritual preceptor is essential.

EB 514-523

1. Cf. mana eva manusyaṇāṁ kāraṇam bandha-mokṣayoh//

41.* Such a devotee would bow to every being with absolute devotion as unto Hari's Person whether it be one of the five elements such as the sky, the air, the fire, the water or the earth, or heavenly luminaries such as the stars, the planets, or living beings, the cardinal points, plants and herbs, etc., the rivers and the seas and mountains (regarding them as a part of Lord Hari's body).

42.** Just as a person who eats food finds satisfaction, nourishment and relief from hunger simultaneously with each morsel of food, similarly to a person who has completely submitted himself to the Lord (the triad, viz.) sincere devotion, realization of the supreme Lord and aversion to other objects (of senses) appear and are found together simultaneously.

43. The devotee of the Lord who steadily and without any interruption worships the feet of Lord Acyuta, attains (simultaneously) the triad, viz. devotion, renunciation of worldly objects and realization of the Lord and through them he directly attains the supreme peace<sup>1</sup> or liberation from Samsāra.

The king (Nimi) requested :

44.*** Be pleased to describe to me the devotee of Lord Hari (who attains the above-mentioned triad simultaneously). What are his characteristics (that distinguish him from) among fellow-men how he behaves and how he talks and what are his distinguishing traits which endear him to the Lord.

* VR: The devotee should regard himself as an integral part of the God's person. By understanding the world as a part of God's body, he becomes quiescent and controls his mind.

EK. gives a highly poetic description of the realization of the Brahman in everything, everywhere (EB. 2,580-602)

** EK : The triad means :

- (i) bhakti—loving devotion to all beings.
- (ii) anuhava or prāpti—Direct God-realization
- (iii) virakti—non-attachment to one's body, wife, children, etc.

1. S.S. & VR—Śānti—subsidence and disappearance of the six types of sufferings of a being such as : hunger, thirst, grief, delusion, old age and death.

*** VJ. : King Nimi enquires after the gradations of votaries.

Hari replied :

45.* He who sees his own self (who is Hari himself) existing in all beings as Brahman and realizes that all (mobile and immobile) creations are established in his own Self which is Brahman (or Hari) himself, is the foremost of all devotees.

46. One who cherishes affectionate devotion to the Lord, friendly feelings towards his Votaries (who entirely depend on him), compassion to the ignorant and indifference towards his enemies is a second-rate votary (as he entertains difference in outlook toward them as contrasted with the “fore-most” type described above).

47. (Believing that Lord Hari is present only in his image and not elsewhere) he who desires to worship and worships with faith Lord Hari and does not respect his votaries and other creatures is an ordinary ignorant votary.<sup>1</sup>

48. Even though the sense-organs receive their objects of enjoyment (if the devotee’s heart is so much absorbed in Lord Viṣṇu that) he feels neither repulsion nor joyous attraction toward them and looks upon this universe as the Māyā of Viṣṇu, such a devotee is of the highest order.

*. SR. quotes a Tantra text which proves the identity of Hari with the Individual Soul (Ātman) due to his all-pervasiveness and logically accurate knowledge (ātatatvāt, pramāṇtvāt) and as such He is the Inner Controller of even insignificant insects with no diminution in his six excellences of infinite dimensions due to his association with insignificant creatures. In brief, he who sees the immanence of the glorious Lord everywhere and in everything is the best votary of the Lord.

EK. : There is a great variety in the external appearance and behaviour of the votaries of God, but he who realizes the complete (identity of his Self, Brahman and all beings—he within all and all within himself—is the best devotee of the Lord.

VR. He who realizes the implication of the epithet “Vāsudeva”—The Lord being in all and all beings as well as himself existing on the support of the Lord, or being a constituent part of the Lord, is the best devotee.

VB refutes the notion of “Supporter and the Supported” of Rāmānuja and establishes the non-duality (advaita) doctrine and the knower of this is the best votary.

1. Cf. Iśa Up. 6 & 7

(1) VR : This verse does not condemn image-worship but image-worship without devotion to Lord’s votaries is depreciated, as such narrow concept of devotion obstructs the fruition or benefit of Lord’s worship.

49.* He is the foremost among the Lord's votaries who, by dint of his constant memory (meditation) of Hari is not deluded by (and affected with) the conditions i.e. sufferings in worldly existence such as : The birth and death affecting the body, hunger and thirst (harassing) the vital principle (prāṇa), fear, (worrying) the mind, strong desire (exciting) the intellect and fatigue exhausting the sense-organs.

50. He is verily the best among the Lord's devotees in whose hearts the seeds of desires for enjoyment and passions and of actions do not germinate at all and who have Lord Vāsudeva as their only resort.<sup>1</sup>

51. He is verily beloved of Lord Hari who is not attached to his body nor is affected by superiority complex on account of his birth (in a high family) or deeds (e.g. penance performed nor by his position in a particular class in society, stage of life or his caste (such as mūrdhāvasikta—born of Brāhmaṇa father and Kṣattriya mother).

52. He who does not entertain the notion of distinction between 'mine' and 'another's' in respect of his property or even his own body, who is equal to all beings<sup>2</sup> and serene-minded, is the best among the votaries of the Lord.

53. He should be regarded as the leader of the followers and devotees of Lord Viṣṇu who will not allow the remembrance of the Lord to be interrupted even for half a winking time

* EK : The five 'places' or components of bondage are the physical body, sense-organs, mind, intellect and the vital principle and they are affected by hunger, thirst, fear, sufferings (Kleśa), birth and death. The great sufferings undergone at these 'places' are called 'The properties or conditions of Samsāra'. EK takes these sufferings one by one and shows how absorption in the remembrance of the Lord brings immunity to the devotee from them, as he is not affected by any of them at all.

1. Verses 48-50 describe how a great devotee behaves.

(i) VR. explains that this egalitarianism is due to his belief that all souls are intelligent in nature and one with Brahman, and physical bodies are products of the unintelligent prakṛti.

(ii) VJ differs :

The notion of identity of Ātman and Paramātmān is not entertained by him while in Samsāra or in his pure stage in Mokṣa. He cites a number of authorities to support the Dvaita notion of distinction between jīva and Brahman.

for gaining the sovereignty of the three worlds. Nor does he waver even for half the twinkling of the eyelid from the lotus feet of the glorious Lord—the feet sought after by gods and others who have not subdued their self.<sup>1</sup>

54. When (once) the fever (in the form) of afflictions in the heart of the devotees (who have submitted themselves absolutely to the will of the Lord) is completely subsided by the cool moon-light emanating from the gem-like (crescent-shaped) nails on the toes of the Lord with very long (universe-covering) strides (or possessing great prowess), how can it (the trouble) arise again? How could the solar heat affect when the moon has risen?

55. That person is said to be the chief of votaries whose heart the Lord does not vacate, as his feet are (tightly) fastened with bond of affection therein—Hari who destroys all the accumulated mass of sins, even if his name is uttered unconsciously or under restraint.<sup>2</sup>

CHAPTER THREE

Discourses on the Māyā, the means to Transcend it, the Brahman and the Path of Action

The King (Nimi) said :

1. We are anxious to know the (nature of the) Māyā (the Will Power) of the Supreme Lord Viṣṇu which deludes those (gods like Brahmā) who themselves are endowed with

1. I differ from ŚR and EK on the interpretation of ajitātma—surdibhiḥ. ŚR dissolves the comp.—ajite—Harau eva—ātma yeṣāṃ te/ 'whose mind is fixed on the invincible Lord'. But if gods have fixed their mind on the Lord, why should they have to hunt after (to find out) the Lord on whose feet they have already fixed their mind? If the gods have not subdued their ego or self, then alone they will try and seek the feet of the Lord. Hence, my above interpretation.

2. SR : Verses 51 to 53 describe the nature of a devotee. That 'He sings the name of the Lord' should be regarded as the answer of 'what a devotee does'. The summary of all these is given in verse 55.

such deluding powers. May your worshipful sires be gracious enough to enlighten us (about Māyā's nature).

2. I am a mortal being scorched by the fever (afflictions) of Samsāra. I do not feel satiated while listening to your speech describing the nectar-like sweet stories of Hari, which are an antidote against the fever in the form of miseries in Sāmsāra.

Antarikṣa said :

2.1. The glorious Lord wishing to become many through his Māyā, created this universe. Though Jīva is pure spiritual essence, free from three guṇas, Māyā invested him with a body controlled by guṇas. The identification of the soul with one's body is the delusion of Jīva (jīva-bhrama).

2.2. This Jīva-bhrama (delusion of the Jīva) is explained with reference to the waking, dreaming and the sleeping states of the Jīva (tat-prayukta-jāgrat-svapna-susupti-rūpāvasthātraya-sambandhān ca vadan bhramam prapañcayati.) The waking state is the misapprehension with reference to external sense; the dreaming state is with relation to the mind; in the sleeping state, the memory is dormant, unmanifest like seeds; and the fourth state is the Jīva's condition in relation to paramātmān. In this stage the Jīva is separate from the body which is the product of Prakṛti and that is the liberated state (prakṛtipari-ṇāmaka-śarirā' bhāvaḥ muktyavasthā iti).

2.3. The Jīva is pure consciousness untainted by passions etc. and free from states like dreaming, sleep, etc. He appears through Māyā to be possessed of those stages.

2.4. When the jīva realizes the transitory nature and futility of three forms of Māyā, he desists to work for trivial pleasures and becomes serene (upa-samyāti, bahiḥ, kṣudra-sukhār-thavyāpārān nivṛtto bhavatīti).

1. VR's text adds here the above four verses but the Bhāgavata Vidyā-piṭha (Ahmedabad) edition gives only the commentary of VR on these verses and not the original text. From what can be gleaned from the commentary, the above appears to be the contents of those verses.

Antarikṣa explained :

3. It is for the sake of enjoyment of objects and liberation of the embodied souls, his own rays, that the ancient-most Prime Person, the cause of all creation (or the Indwelling soul of all beings) evolved these great and small bodies, out of the five gross elements, O mighty-armed king.<sup>1</sup>

4. In this way having entered as the inner-dweller (for the well-being of all the jīvas) into beings which are created out of the five elements,<sup>2</sup> God divides himself and appears as one (in the form of the mind), and ten (in the form of five cognitive and five conative senses), and enables them to enjoy the guṇas or objects of senses.

5. The master of the body—the jīva enjoys the objects of senses by means of sense-organs illumined (by the knowledge or activated) by the Inner Controller. He misapprehends this created body as himself and gets attached to it. (This is due to Māyā.)

6. The jīva who is conditioned with a physical body, performs with his sense-organs acts, as motivated by the tendencies resulting from acts done in the previous birth. He experiences both the pleasant and unpleasant fruits of karmas and revolves in this Samsāra.<sup>3</sup>

7. In this way, going through various corporeal existences (in consequence of his Karma) which carry with them innumer-

1. ŚR states that Māyā, being indescribable, only its effects, viz. creation of the universe, etc. can be described. But according to EK. Māyā is unreal (mithyā), non-existent like the son of a barren woman, the sky-flower, 'water-catering centre' of mirage, etc. The term avidyā means that which never exists.

—EB 2.32-52.

2. EK: God enters his creation in the form of essential characteristics such as liquidity of water. Similarly, he divided himself in the sense-organs by becoming their essential function such as 'seeing' of the eye, 'taste' of the tongue. That we can enjoy an object through our senses is due to the particular capacity of the sense which (the capacity) is God.

—EB 2.86-129.

3. This verse explains why a jīva is not liberated after enjoying the objects of senses but suffers unending revolutions in Samsāra—ŚR.

able evils and miseries, the jīva, being helpless, experiences repeated births and deaths upto the dissolution of the universe.

8. When the dissolution of the gross elements is impending, the beginningless and endless eternal Time-Spirit<sup>1</sup> forcibly withdraws this manifest universe consisting of gross substances and their subtle guṇas into its unmanifest cause (the mūla-prakṛti).

9. (When such dissolution is imminent) at that time a severe draught—absolutely rainless—will devastate the earth for one hundred years. And the scorching sun with its heat enhanced by the (destructive) Time-Spirit shall completely consume the three worlds by its heat.

10. Huge flames of fire emanating from the (thousand) mouths of the (serpent god) Śeṣa and burning the nether-world from its bottom, soar up high, burning down every thing and helped by the wind, they envelop the universe on all side.

11. The clouds of deluge called Samvartaka with each line of drop as thick as the trunk of an elephant, will pour down for one hundred years incessantly and the whole universe is sub-emerged in cosmic waters.

12. God Brahmā the Person (Deity) presiding over the universe leaves his conditioning universe (which has been now dissolved), enters the subtle Unmanifest like the fire entering into the unmanifested principle of fire, when the fuel is completely consumed.<sup>2</sup>

13. The earth being deprived of its distinguishing characteristic—smell is transformed into water and the water being divested of its special property, viz. liquidity, is changed into fire.

1. It is eternal Viṣṇu who as Kāla withdraws, etc.—V.J.

2. ŚR: After the termination of his office, god Brahmā should merge into Prakṛti like all jīvas, if god Brahmā be not a devotee of God. But he being a devotee of the Lord, is absorbed into Brahman. V.J. also accepts the merging of god Brahmā into paramātmān. VR. takes the sing. Vairājaḥ puruṣaḥ as representing all jīvas withdrawn into the mūla-prakṛti and the illustration of fire shows that their knowledge is narrowed down in that merged state. EK quotes Bh. P. 10.2.32,33 and emphasizes that bhakti (devotion) is the pre-condition of mukti (liberation). Merely the office of Brahmā is not enough for mukti.

14. Deprived of its property of colour by the Sāṃvartika (universe-ending) darkness, fire merges into air and air (vāyu) deprived of its special characteristic touch, is lost into the ether (or the sky). The ether in its turn, being divested of its characteristic property, viz. sound, by the Supreme Soul in the form of Time-Spirit (Kālātman) the ether gets merged into the ātman i.e. Tāmasic Ego.

15.* Sense-organs and Intellect enter the (rājasika) Ego while the mind along with the presiding deities of senses merges into the (sāttvika) Ego. And this Ego, with all its (sāttvika, rājasika and tāmasika) characteristics, merges with the Mahat which in its turn enters the Prakṛti.

16. We have now described to you the Māyā of the glorious Lord, characterised by three colours (i.e. guṇas such as sattva, rajas and tamas) and which brings about the creation and carries out the maintenance and destruction of the universe. What more do you wish to hear?

The King Nimi submitted :

17. O great sage! Be pleased to expound the way whereby persons who have identified their 'I-ness' (soul) with the gross (physical) body, will easily cross over this Lord's Māyā from which it is very difficult to get liberation by persons with uncontrolled minds. Is there any path other than bhakti which has already been mentioned (supra 11.2.37).

Prabuddha explained :

18. Persons leading a householder's life (living as husband and wife) and following the path of Karma for the removal of miseries and attainment of happiness, should observe and consider how contrary results are met by them.

19. (They should also consider: ) What pleasure is derived from wealth which is so very difficult to obtain and which (when obtained) entails nothing but miseries—a veritable death of one's own? Or what happiness one can get after acquisition of houses (property), children, relatives and cattle which are so very transient.

* VJ: The process of dissolution is as follows : Ākāśa into the Tāmasic Ego; senses, mind, intellect with their presiding deities into Taijasa Ego. The threefold Ego and its products into the Mahat which in its turn merges into Ātman. The Virāṭ puruṣa withdraws all effects into their causes, and he enters into the subtle Unmanifest.

20. One should know that in the same way (as in this world), the other (celestial) world, attained by performance of karmas is transient (and full of miseries). There is rivalry with the equals, jealousy towards the superiors and the fear of destruction (and termination of the period of the stay in celestial regions)<sup>1</sup>, as we find it among the dependent princes (under an emperor), here (on the earth).

21. A person desirous of knowing the highest good, therefore, should resort to a preceptor who is expert in logical exposition of the Brahman couched in words (i.e. Upaniṣads and Śrutis) and has realized the Supreme Brahman and (the sure index of which is that he) is well-established in the serenity of mind (and detachment).

22. Regarding his spiritual preceptor as his own self and his Deity (Hari), he should, by rendering sincere and devoted service to his preceptor, learn (and practise) the duties and ways of life of Lord's votaries, so that Lord Hari who is the soul of the universe and confers self-realization (on his devotees), becomes pleased with him.

23. In the initial stage, one should learn (and practise) to detach his mind from everything (such as wife, children, property) and attach his mind to the pious persons (devoted to the Lord), and also should cherish mercy (to the subordinate and inferior beings), friendliness (with the equals) and modesty (towards the superiors) accordingly.

24. He should further imbibe the virtues of (mental and physical) purity, practise penance or religious duties, cultivate forbearance, observe silence (i.e. avoid unnecessary wastage of words), study the scriptures, practise straight forwardness, celibacy, non-violence and balanced attitude of mind under the stress of contradictory conditions (e.g. pleasure and pain, respect and insult, etc.).

1. Cf. Yatheha karma-cito lokāḥ kṣīyata evamevāmutra puṇya-cito lokāḥ kṣīyate.
Chāndogya Up. 8.1.6.

25. He should realize that the Soul, as an intelligent existence, has pervaded the world and is the (omnipresent) Lord, the controller of the universe; and he should live in solitude, should not cherish any attachment to his house (property, relatives, etc.), wear washed rag-cloth or bark-garment (as dress) and remain contented with whatever one gets.

26. He should entertain firm faith in the scriptures glorifying the Lord, but should not denigrate scriptures of others. He should control his mind (by breath-control—prāṇāyāma), speech (by silence) and deeds (by non-attachment) should speak the truth and control his internal organ (the mind as well as the external senses).

27. He should always listen to, glorify and meditate on the incarnations, deeds and excellences of Lord Hari of miraculous deeds, and learn to dedicate all his acts (including performance of sacrifice and such other religious acts to him).

28. He should also learn to resign unto the Supreme Lord all his performances of sacrifice, worship, charitable gifts, penance performed, muttering of sacred syllables or names of God, his activities and whatever is dear to him such as (scents, flowers, etc.) and dedicate<sup>1</sup> to the service of the Lord wives, children, houses (property) and his very life itself.

29. Thus he should entertain friendly relations to persons who have realized Lord Kṛṣṇa as their very Soul and as their protector or as the controller of all jīvas. He should adore the Lord as abiding in both the mobiles and immobiles<sup>2</sup> especially in men, and chiefly in the righteous men who observe their religious duties and out of them, specially in the devotees of the Lord.<sup>3</sup>

1. EK. explains that this dedication implies complete non-attachment to wives, children, etc. —EB. 3.565.

2. Ubhayatra : He should try to worship the Lord as abiding in the heart but if the Lord cannot be visualized within in spite of meditation, he should worship the images of the Lord which are both mobile and immobile. The chief images at ancient sites like Dvārakā or Pandharpur are the “immobile images” while the images on worships at home are “mobile”

—EB-3.569-571.

3. Under mahatsu EK. includes guru or the spiritual preceptor as the most important person to be served, as the guru and Brahman are identical—nay the guru is superior, as he introduces us to Brahman. And everything should be dedicated to the guru. —EB-3.576-581.

30. He should learn how to discuss with each other and sing of the sanctifying glory of the Lord. And in this way, in association with these, he should (forget rivalry, jealousy, etc. and) find spiritual joy, happiness and complete freedom from all miseries.

31. Remembering themselves and reminding each other of Hari who annihilates the mass of sins instantly, their devotion is developed unto Love divine and out of the thrill of ecstasy of this divine Love, the hair all over their bodies stand on their end (and this spiritual delight of the disciples, gives the spiritual preceptor the highest delight<sup>1</sup>).

32. Devotees (who have reached such a stage) behave in an unconventional manner. They sometimes weep (out of anxiety to visualize him), some times burst out into laughing and feel delighted (at his remembrance), some times they go on talking (about his sportive acts), some times they dance (in ecstasy), some times they sing of him and imitate his acts. In this way, coming to realize him and attaining the Supreme bliss, they remain silent.

33. He who thus learns (and practises<sup>2</sup>) the duties and the way of life of the devotees of the Lord, develops Love divine and thereby becomes absolutely devoted to (and absorbed in) Lord Nārāyaṇa, and easily crosses the Māyā which is otherwise very difficult to transcend.

King Nimi asked :

34. As you are the foremost among those who have realized the Brahman, it behoves you to propound to me the nature of Brahman or the Supreme Soul which is also designated as Nārāyaṇa (Do the terms Brahman, Paramātmā and Nārāyaṇa denote the same attributeless entity or imply any special feature ?).

1. EK. vide EB 3.576-614.

2. EK. emphasizes that one should resort to a spiritual preceptor and under his guidance learn and practise the duties and way of life of the Rhāgavatas.
—EB 3.615.

Pippalāyana replied :

35. O lord of kings ! Please do understand that to be the Supreme Reality, which (as Nārāyaṇa) is the cause of the creation, sustenance and dissolution (of the universe) but (being eternal and beginningless) is himself un-caused (and indulges in the above activity without any cause or motive); which (as Brahman) exists persistently in three states namely those of wakefulness, dream and deep sleep as also in the fourth supra-conscious state, both during Samādhi (trance) as well as outside in other states also, animated by which (as Paramātman) the body, senses, vital breath and the mind carry out their own function (The three aspects<sup>1</sup> viz. Nārāyaṇa, Brahman and Paramātman constitute one and the same Reality ?

36.* Even as sparks of fire can neither illumine nor burn the fire, (their source) neither the mind, speech, the power of seeing, intellect, the vital breath and the sense-organs can enter (i.e. reach and comprehend) the Brahman. The word (i.e. the Vedas) which is (regarded as) authoritative in matters relating to Ātman indirectly hints at it by inference, as it denies

1. Although ŚR distinguishes the three aspects of Reality, viz. as the creator etc. of the universe (Nārāyaṇa), eternal existence in all states of consciousness, Samādhi, etc. (Brahman) and the animator of the body, vital breath, etc. (Paramātman), EK says that it is all Nārāyaṇa and to facilitate the realization of Brahman, he puts forth the Paramātman aspect and emphasizes that that which is within man as animator is the Brahman and Nārāyaṇa and that Paramātman, Brahman and Nārāyaṇa are one.

—EB 3.630-646.

* VJ: The terms mind, speech etc. indicate their presiding deities such as Rudra, Sarasvatī, Sūrya, Brahmā, etc. These deities cannot comprehend the Paramātman. Lakṣmi the presiding deity of Veda cannot do it. The Veda conveys him negatively by eliminating what is not Paramātman. The goddess Lakṣmi indirectly conveys him to her cause.

VR : (The gist) :

Flames are attributes of fire. Just as fire cannot be the object of cognition of flames, Brahman cannot be cognised by the mind, senses or the jīva. The Word (Vedānta or Śruti) conveys Brahman as its purport or implication. If the Brahman were non-existent, the statement of inability of senses or the mind to cognise it is meaningless. Denying the senses, etc., the power of cognition means that Brahman does exist and that the Veda is the only means of knowing the Brahman.

itself the power to describe it directly in positive terms. But in the absence of Reality, no negative description is possible.

37.* At the beginning (before the creation of the universe) there was one (Brahman) which came to be known as threefold Pradhāna consisting of the attributes Sattva, Rajas and Tamas. By the predominance of Rajas or its active creative power, it is called Sūtrātmā or Hiraṇyagarbha and with the dominance of Sattva or the power of knowledge it is termed as Mahat. When the condition of Avidyā is invested, it is called Jīva (Individual Soul) or Ahaṁkāra (Ego). This one Brahman becomes many and shines as deities (presiding over senses), the cognitive and conative senses and objects of senses as well as the resulting fruit, (viz. the experience of pleasure and pain, etc.) through his immensely powerful Māyā. The gross (i.e. the effects) and the subtle (i.e. their causes) are both (caused and) illumined by Brahman which is beyond the reach of both.

38.** This soul (Ātmā) was not born and shall not die;

* EK: At the beginning there was only the Brahman Om. It became threefold in its three mātrās, A-U-M of the nature of the three attributes, viz. Sattva, Rajas and Tamas. When these attributes are all in a balanced stage, it is called Pradhāna. —EB. 3.703-701.

VR : (The gist only) Pradhāna is the common thread of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas. Mahat, Ahaṁkāra and Jīva are its products. The Jīva experiences the fruits of his acts—pleasure and pain through his senses. The Brahman is different from them and the intelligent and unintelligent creations constitute his body.

VJ : The verses summarise different views which identify Brahman with the Jīva, etc. These views are not correct. Brahman is distinct from and greater than what is known as cause and effect. [layoḥ kārya-kāraṇayoḥ param vilakṣaṇam bhinnam Brahma iti].

** VR (The latter half) : In every category of life (such as in the bodies of god, sub-human beings, etc.) the soul is always connected with Prakṛti, till he attains liberation (ā-mokṣāt-Prakṛti-sambandhavān) though essentially it is pure intelligence and knowledge (Jñāna-mātra-svarūpa). It is through the influence of senses that he appears to be divided and transformed, while he activates the body.

VJ. quotes his authorities and states that Brahman is always present as unmodified essence & unmixed consciousness, in all things which are subject to birth, death, change, etc. Just as the vital breath is called by the sense through which it functions, Brahman is described differently. Yathendriya-gataḥ prāṇas teṣāṁ Śaktyā vikalpate / evaṁ sad-rūpakam Brahma tat-tacchaktyā vikalpyate // ekam eva mahā-śakti-prāṇasyāpi bala-pradam //

He neither grows nor does he decrease; He is the knower—the witness—of the times of the different states (such as youth, old age) of all bodies (just as the seer is different from the body). He is all-pervading, eternally unchanging pure consciousness-cum-existence. As in the case of Prāṇa, this consciousness-cum-existence appears as many, under the influence of senses.

39.* In whatever category of body—whether born of eggs or from wombs or from seeds or from sweat—the jīva is born, the vital force (prāṇa) follows him (himself remaining the same, unaffected by the category of the body), (similarly) when all the sense-organs (which are active in wakefulness) and the Ego (which functions in the dream state) remain oblivious (as in a deep sleep), the soul being devoid of conditioning states, alone persists in that stage as can be inferred from our remembrance (of having enjoyed a sound sleep).

40. If with intensive devotion generated through desire for seeking the feet of the lotus-navelled God, a person, by his own mental efforts, cleanses all the dirt and impurities clogged on his heart due to three guṇas and acts (resulting in merit or sin), the Soul (which pre-exists there) directly reveals himself in that extremely pure heart like the light of the sun become visible to clear eyes.

The King requested :

41. Be pleased to describe to us that Path of Action (Parama Yoga) being purified by which a man quickly shakes

39.* VR (The latter half) : When we become oblivious of our body and the activities of the sense-organs, the Ego and the mind remain in abeyance (as in deep sleep), we jīvas realize the existence of the self (...dehāva-bhāsaṁ vinā yathāvad ātmā svar ūpa-prakāśo bhavati.)

EK. In deep sleep, the Ego lies dormant in Avidyā ; hence we cannot visualize ātman. It is after the elimination of Avidyā and Ego that the self-or Brahman is revealed.

—EB. 3.733-35.

VJ : (The gist only)

In the various categories of bodies Jīva enters through the medium of Prāṇa and Paramātmā. If Paramātmā were absent, Jīva could not have any memory of his state of deep sleep mṛti-supti-prabodhāder niyantaḥ Harir ekaḥ.

off all Karmas and attains the supreme knowledge attainable only through disassociation from all actions.

42. Formerly, I asked this very question to Sages (like Sanaka and others) in the presence of my father (Ikṣvāku). But those (mind-born) sons of god Brahmā did not answer it. (Pray be pleased to explain to me the reason of their silence.

Avirhotra replied :

43. The classification of Karma into Karma (duties enjoined by Vedas), Akarma (acts prohibited by Vedas) and Vikarma (omission of Karma and commission of Akarma) belongs to the sphere of the Vedas and not within the range of ordinary parlance of men.

As the Vedas are the revelations from God, even wise sages stand confounded in their interpretations. (The sages whom you questioned were omniscient. But then you were of pre-mature age and could not have understood their explanation. Hence their silence then).

44. The Veda implies something deeper and different from what appears to be the superficial interpretation of the text. Just as a child is tempted with something sweet to make it swallow (the unpalatable) medicine (the object of the medicine being restoration of the child's health and not the sweet thing that the child gets immediately after gulping down the medicine), similarly, the real object of the Veda is to liberate one from the bond of Karma and its consequence, for which Karmas are apparently prescribed.

45. (One should not indulge in dereliction of the prescribed Vedic duties from the beginning, prematurely thinking that liberation from Karmas is the real object in life). If a person being himself ignorant and having no control over his senses, does not perform the duties prescribed by the Vedas, due to the Adharma (the course of unrighteousness) in which he is involved by Vikarma (non-performance of the prescribed act and commission of the acts prohibited by the Veda), he goes from death to death (as he remains entangled in Samsāra).

46. He who performs acts prescribed in the Veda but has no attachment to the fruits thereof and dedicates them to the Supreme Ruler, attains to that state of accomplishment<sup>1</sup> (i.e. Mokṣa) in which Karma or its fruit does not bind him. The promise of fruits of Karmas is meant to create interest in the Karma.

47. Whoever is desirous of instantaneously cutting as under the knot (of egotism) of the heart of his self which is Brahman himself, should, in addition to the Vedic rites, perform the worship of Lord Keśava in the manner prescribed in the (Pāñcarātra) Tantra.

48. After getting oneself initiated (in the Tāntrika path) through the grace of the spiritual preceptor<sup>2</sup> and being shown the technical method of worship by his guru, he should worship the Supreme Person in the form of (whatever) image (of the Lord) that he likes the best.

49. In a thorough clean state of the body, he should sit in front of the idol of God. He should cleanse his body (internally) by means of breath-control and other practices. He should armour himself by assigning the protection of various parts of his body to different deities<sup>3</sup> and worship Lord Hari.

50-51. He should first purify the articles of worship (like flowers by removing insects if any and sprinkling water), the ground (by sweeping and washing), his ownself (by Nyāsa and

1. ŚR. explains; Just as a child is tempted to gulp medicine by offering 'the fruit' of sweet-meats, the promise of heaven to a sacrificer is for persuading a person to perform the Vedic Karma. He quotes Bṛhad. Up. and shows that Karma is an accessory of spiritual knowledge and the performer of Karma realizes it and loses the zest and attachment for Karmas. This non-attached pure state of mind leading to the realization of Brahman is attained by him. VR. thinks that such a person gives up all Karmas leading to Samsāra and attains Mokṣa.

EK. defines naiṣkarmya as the Karma dedicated to God and such Karma leads to realization of Brahma.

—EB. 3.793-802.

2. VD. insists on the selection of proper guru. Quoting a number of Purāṇic and other texts, he asserts that the spiritual preceptor should be a Brāhmaṇa householder possessing spiritual qualities, etc.

3. Nyāsa :—Assignment of the various parts of one's body to different deities which is usually accompanied by prayers or pronunciation of some sacred symbolic syllables and corresponding gesticulations.

—ASD. P. 306.

concentration of the mind) and image of god (by removing the previous coating of sandal-paste and other articles). He should then purify, by sprinkling with water, his own seats and keep ready at hand articles of worship (such as water for washing the feet of Deity and other materials of worship). With his heart serene and concentrated, he should invoke the Lord (in the image, mentally). Performing the six nyāsas from the heart onwards, he should chant the mūla-mantra (the sacred syllables or names received by him from the preceptor) and worship the Lord with the available articles of worship as abiding both in the image and in his heart (wherein he should also instal him).

52-53. He should perform the worship of the image of the Lord including the various limbs of his persons, and the arms and emblems he holds (such as the discus Sudarśana and others) and the attendant deities (like Sunanda, Garuḍa). He should worship each form of the Lord chanting the sacred Mantra peculiar to it, offering water to wash his hands, feet and for ācamana (rinsing the mouth), etc. He should bathe the Deity and decorate it with cloth ornaments. According to the prescribed rites of worship, he should worship the Lord with sandal-paste, flowers, Akṣatas<sup>1</sup> (unbroken grains of rice to be applied to the Deity's fore-head only), garlands, he should burn scented incenses before him and wave lights before him and offer food. After eulogising the Lord with appropriate hymns, he should prostrate himself before the Lord (i.e. Lord's image).

54. He should worship the image of Hari (before himself) contemplating himself as being one with Hari. He should then place the relic of worship (such as flowers, etc.) on his own head, and deposit the image of Hari in its proper place and Lord Hari in his own heart.

55. He who worships the Lord, the Supreme Soul as present in the fire, the sun, the water, etc., in the guest (who arrives unexpectedly) and in his own heart, is liberated (from Samsāra) before long.

1. As ŚR. notes the akṣatas are to be used for application on the fore-head of Hari and not elsewhere in the worship. He quotes an authority which prohibits the use of akṣatas in Viṣṇu-worship and the Ketaki (flower) in Śiva's worship.

CHAPTER FOUR

Description of the Lord's Incarnations by Drumila

King Nimi said :

1. Be pleased to describe to us those various deeds performed by Lord Hari in his various incarnations which he has taken at his own sweet will, in the past, present and future.

Drumila replied :

2. He is a person of childish (immature) understanding who seeks to count the innumerable excellences and attributes of the Infinite Lord. It may be possible for him in the course of a long period of time and with extreme difficulty, to count the particles of dust on the earth, but never the excellences of Almighty Lord—the resort of all powers.

3. When, with the five elements evolved out of himself, Nārāyaṇa, the First Prime Deity, created this universe known as Virāj, like his own body, and entered it with a ray or part of his own (as Inner Controller) he came to acquire the epithet Puruṣa (the Indweller in the body).

4. The assemblage and arrangement of three worlds rest on the support of the Lord's personality<sup>1</sup>. Both the cognitive and conative sense-organs of all embodied beings function due to his sense-organs only. He is by himself knowledge or consciousness. It is through his birth that creatures derive their physical strength, the energy and strength of their senses and activity. Through Sattva and other attributes (viz. Rajas and Tamas), he became the Prime Agent of creation, subsistence and destruction of the Universe.

5. At the beginning of creation (of the Universe) this Prime Deity, in association with the attribute rajas appeared as Brahmā for the creation of universe; (associated with the attribute Sattva), he become Viṣṇu, the dispenser of the fruit of sacrifice and the protector of the twice-born castes (Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya and Vaiśya) and the religious order; associated with his attribute tamas, he became Rudra for the destruction of the universe. In this way, he from whom the creation, protection of the universe ever continues through the instrumentality of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Rudra, is the First and Foremost Deity.

6. As Nārāyaṇa and Nara, the foremost of the sages and of perfectly serene mind, he was born of Dharma and his spouse Mūrti, the daughter of Dakṣa. He expounded to sages (like Nārada) the path of action leading to the realization of the Soul (who is characterised by actionlessness). He practised (an ideal type of) penance and his feet are still served (and worshipped) by prominent sages.

7. Suspecting with the apprehension that this sage (Nārāyaṇa-Nara) covets to take possession of his position (as the king of heaven), Indra deputed Kāmadeva, the god of love, along with his troupe. Being ignorant of his (Nārāyaṇa's) spiritual greatness, Kāmadeva went with his paraphernalia—a bevy of celestial damsels, the vernal season and the gentle wind (from the sandal-forests of Malaya) to his hermitage at Badarī, and hit him with shafts in the forms of side-glances of heavenly damsels.

8. Knowing perfectly well that the indiscretion has been committed by Indra, he laughed loudly without even slightly feeling the touch of pride (at his own moral strength). He assured the trembling visitors, “O (mighty) god of Love, O (South) wind, O heavenly damsels, do not be afraid. Please accept our hospitality (If no hospitality is offered, the hermitage would be as good as void). May our hermitage be non-void (i. e. worthy of its existence).”

9. When the sage Nārāyaṇa who removed their fear addressed them thus, the gods who bent their head low with shame, submitted to him, “O all-pervading Lord who are transcendental to the Māyā, this unperturbedness in you is not surprising. You are the Supreme Self subject to no modifications, and your lotus-feet are respected with obeisance by hosts of sages who revel in the bliss of self-realization.

10. (It is not surprising that we should behave according to our nature and create obstacles in your penance). A number of obstacles are created by gods in the path of your servants (devotees) who want to transcend the abode of gods (the heaven), and attain directly to your highest region. No impediments obstruct the path of others who offer in sacrifices the respective shares of gods as oblations. But as you are the protector of your devotees, your votary sets his foot on the heads of obstacles (and trampling them down ascends to Vaikuṇṭha).

11. (When your non-devotees perform penance they fall a victim to us—the erotic passion or the passion called Anger). Those who cross the immeasurable oceans in the form of tempters like us overcome hunger, thirst, (extremes of climate in) three seasons (viz. the summer, rains and the winter), winds and curb the palate and the sexual urge, succumb to futile anger and thereby waste their austerities in uttering imprecations). They are like ocean-crossers who get themselves drowned in the cavity caused by a cow's hoof."

12. While they were praising him thus, the Almighty Lord, (in order to humble down the pride of beauty of celestial nymphs and others) created by Yogic Power and showed them women of marvellous beauty, all well adorned with costly ornaments and raiments, waiting upon himself.

13. When those attendants of gods (viz. Kāma, the spring season, heavenly ladies) saw women beautiful like goddess Śrī, (their pride for their own beauty was humbled down and) their own complexion became faded at the excellence of the superior beauty of those women and they were enraptured with fragrance of their bodies.

14. The god of the Lord of gods (Nārāyaṇa) laughingly told them who were bowing to him with humility, "Choose any one of these women who is suitable, as an ornament of the celestial world."

15. Saying "so be it", the servants of gods complied with his Command. They selected Ūrvaśī, the most beautiful among heavenly damsels and repaired to the celestial regions following her.

16. They paid their respects to Indra in the assembly of gods and while all gods were eagerly listening, described to him the superior spiritual power of Nārāyaṇa at which Indra was astonished and became afraid (at his indiscretion in offending Nārāyaṇa).

17. It is for the good of the world that Lord Viṣṇu incarnated with a ray (part) of his own, in the form of a swan (to expound Ĵñāna yoga to god Brahmā when questioned by his sons), as Datta (the son of Atri) as the ever celibate Sanat-Kumāra, as our father Rṣabha. Taking the form of Hayagrīva (a horse-necked God), he killed the demon Madhu and recovered the Vedas from him.

18. In his incarnation as a Fish, at the time of deluge (at the end of Kalpa), he protected Manu, the earth and the sages and (seeds of all) plants and herbs. In his descent as a divine Boar, he killed demon Hiraṇyākṣa, the son of Diti, while he was lifting up the earth from the bottom of the sea. Assuming the form of divine Tortoise, he supported the mount (Mandara) on his back at the time of churning the ocean for nectar. Descending as Hari, he rescued from the jaws of a crocodile the afflicted king of elephants who appealed to him for succor.

19. He rescued the sages (called Vālakhilyas) who were thumb-sized and who, while they went to fetch samidhs for sage Kaśyapa, fell into a hollow created by cow's hoofs who were drowning as if in a sea (and were therefore, ridiculed by Indra) and were praying him (for life). He absolved Indra also who was involved in the darkness (of the sin of slaying a Brāhmaṇa) due to his killing of Vṛtra (who was a Brāhmaṇa). He set free the heavenly ladies who lay helplessly imprisoned in the houses of Asuras. For ensuring freedom from fear for the righteous people, he incarnated as a Man-lion and killed Hiraṇyakaśipu, the King of Asuras.

20. In every Manvantara, during the wars between gods and Asuras, he incarnated with his rays for the sake of gods and killing the leaders of Asuras, he protected the three worlds. Appearing as the divine Dwarf (Vāmana), he, under the pretext of requesting for alms took away this earth from Bali and gave it back to gods, the sons of Aditi.

21. Incarnating as Paraśurāma, the conflagration born in the Bhṛgu clan for destroying the forest in the form of Haihaya family, he extirpated the Kṣattriyas from the surface of the earth twentyone times. As Rāma, the consort of Sītā, he constructed a bridge across the sea (to Laṅkā) and killed the ten-headed

22. For the removal of the burden of earth, the eternal, birthless Lord will take birth in the race of Yadus, and will accomplish feats which would be very difficult even for gods to perform. Then he would incarnate as Buddha and would delude by his disputations and dialectics those who, though ineligible, will try to perform sacrifices. And ultimately at the end of Kali Age, he will descend as Kalki and exterminate the Śūdra rulers.

23. O mighty-armed Janaka (Nimi) ! Innumerable are such incarnations and deeds of the Lord of the universe of immense glory (a few of which have been recounted to you.

CHAPTER FIVE

Nature and Fate of non-Devotees : Yuga-Wise Methods of Worshipping the Lord

The King (Nimi) enquired :

1. O sages, foremost among those who have realized the Ātman ! What is the condition and fate of those persons who do not mostly adore Lord Hari and whose desires are still unsatiated and whose minds and senses uncontrolled ?

Camasa replied :

2. From the mouth, arms, thighs and feet of the Supreme Person were severally originated the four varṇas (classes of society) along with the Āśramas (Stages in life). According to their predominant characteristic qualities (viz. Sattva, Rajas and Tamas and their combinations), they were distinctly classified as Brāhmaṇa, Kṣātriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra.

1. ŚR states that this verb in the present tense (Jayati) indicates that this dialogue took place while Rāma was alive. The use of the future tense with reference to Kṛṣṇa and others supports this view.

3. Out of these, those who do not adore the Supreme Ruler, their direct Originator, either through ignorance or through negligence of that Great Person, lose their present status and fall down into hell.

4. Women, persons from Śūdra and such other classes (who are denied the opportunity and hence) are away from (the places or chances of) hearing the stories of Hari and also from listening to the songs of the excellent qualities of Hari,<sup>1</sup> deserve compassion from sages like you. (It behoves you to guide them in the path of Devotion.)

5. But Brāhmaṇas, Kṣātriyas and Vaiśyas, by virtue of their original birth, and second birth through their Upanayana (investiture of the sacred thread) ceremony (become eligible for studies, performance of sacrifices, etc.), stand in the proximity of Lord's feet. But even they are deluded (to become attached to the fruit of their Karmas) by accepting the Arthavāda (apparent and superficial meaning) of the Vedas.

6. These persons are ignorant of the method of performing Karmas (without getting themselves involved in the fruits of the acts), being conceited fools, they regard themselves as the learned ones (and hence do not seek guidance of others for the technique of performing Karmas without getting bound by them). These fools being fascinated and impatient by the sweet words of the Vedas (promising happiness in heaven) indulge in sweet talk.

7. Due to the influence of Rajas, they are ruthless in their designs; are lustful and revengeful like serpents. These wicked, conceited hypocrites laugh at the real devotees who are beloved of Hari.

8. Addicted to sexual pleasures, they adore (and cajole) women. Living in houses dominated with craving for conjugal pleasures, they talk to each other of their (present and prospective) achievements (or they wish each other to be blest with wives, children, prosperity). They perform sacrifices without observing the correct procedure or distribution of (adequate) food or giving of (the due) sacrificial fees. They kill animals for personal appetite unmindful of the consequences of such destruction of life.

1. Or : are far from i.e. cannot approach those who extol the excellences of the Lord (in Kīrtana).

9. Being elated with the pride of wealth, prosperity, lineage, learning, munificence, personal beauty, physical power and superior aptitude for action, these wicked people get blinded and despise not only righteous devotees beloved of Lord Hari, but also the Supreme Lord Himself.

10. Persons lacking in the wisdom do not care to listen what is explicitly sung in the Vedas about the Supreme Lord—that he is the eternal principle permeating everything like the sky and is the beloved-most Indwelling soul in all embodied beings. They interpret the Vedas suitably as sanctioning their desires (for women, wine, etc.).

11. It is the natural tendency of creatures to indulge in sexual intercourse, and enjoy non-vegetarian food and wine. No injunction for these is necessary from the Veda. The Veda provides a check over this by allowing sexual intercourse with one's married wife (at the proper time of the period), eat meat at the end of a sacrifice and drink wine during the Sautrāmaṇi sacrifice (but never otherwise). The real intention of the Vedic injunctions (in these matters) is to make a person abstain from them.

12. The only object of wealth is to bear fruit, viz. dharma. It leads to spiritual knowledge and direct realization of the soul and supreme peace (mokṣa). But people utilise their wealth for the family or personal comfort and fail to take cognisance of the god of death, the formidable and inexorable enemy of their bodies.

13. The smelling of wine (in the Sautrāmaṇi sacrifice) is laid down as its intake (and no drinking of liquor is permitted); a beast is to be (symbolically) offered to the deities (by touching it) in sacrifices, but no killing for meat-eating is allowed; similarly, sexual intercourse (with one's wife) is to be indulged in for procreation but not for sexual enjoyment. But people do not understand this pure course of their own dharma.

14. But those wicked persons who do not know the real nature of Dharma, and being obstinate and haughty, consider themselves to be righteous and kill beasts without any remorse and are reciprocally eaten by those very beasts in the next world in hell.

15. These godless people hate Lord Hari—their very indwelling self who abides in the bodies of others as well (as their Soul); and fixing their attachment to their mortal body and its relatives (wives, sons, etc.), they fall down deep into hell.

16. Those who have not grasped the correct knowledge of Reality and have crossed the stage of total ignorance (by possessing imperfect knowledge) regard themselves as non-momentary (permanent), and pursue the three objectives of human life (Dharma, Artha and Kāma); such persons (who thus follow a suicidal path) ruin themselves.

17. Such people shrouding their Self in ignorance and with their desires unrequited, mistake ignorance (i. e. Karma) for knowledge. Being thwarted in achieving their objects and their hopes and wishes being frustrated by the Time-Spirit they ruin themselves (and suffer misery)<sup>1</sup>.

18. Persons, averse to Lord Vāsudeva, are compelled against their will to abandon their household, children, friends and wealth (property) acquired by them with great efforts and are forced to enter into the dark hell (i.e. ignorance).

The King Nimi said :

19. Be pleased to explain to us now, in which ages (yugas) of what complexion and form and by what names is the Lord known and with what rites of worship he is worshipped by men.

Karabhājana replied :

20. In the ages Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali, Lord Keśava assumes different forms, complexions and names and he is to be worshipped in different ways.

21. In the Kṛta age, the Lord is of fair(white) complexion, has four arms, wears matted locks of hair, is clad in bark-garments and deer-skin; he puts on a sacred thread and carries in his hands a rosary of Rudrākṣa, a staff and a water-jar of gourd.

1. *Asuryā nāma te lokā andhena tamasā'' vṛtāḥ/
tāñs te pretyā'bhigacchanti ye ke cātmahano janāḥ || Itā. Up.*

22. Men of that Age are quiescent by nature; entertain no feeling of enmity, are friendly towards all and look upon all beings as equals. They worship the Deity with penance, meditation, control of mind and the senses.

23. The Lord is addressed with the epithets Haṁsa, Suparṇa, Vaikuṇṭha, Dharma, Lord of Yoga, Amala, Īśvara, Puruṣa Avyakta (the un-manifest) and Paramātmā (the Supreme Soul), in that age.

24. In the age called Tretā, he the Lord is red in complexion, has four arms and wears a zone of three cords (round his waist indicating initiation), he has golden locks of hair. He, being the embodiment of sacrifice as described in the three Vedas, carries in his hand sruk, sruvā (ladles and spoons for offering oblations in the fire and other accessories for performing sacrifices).

25. In that age, righteous men who are the expounders of the Vedas, worship Lord Hari, the embodiment of gods, through (rites prescribed in) the three Vedas,

26. He is then called Viṣṇu, Yajña, Pṛṣnigarbha (the son of Pṛṣni, the wife of Prajāpati Sutapas), Sarva-deva, Urukrama, Vṛṣākapi, Jayanta and Urugāya.

27. In the Dvāpara age, the Lord is bluish (like the atasi-hemp-flower) in complexion. He wears yellow silken cloth and bears all his original arms (like Sudarśana discus, Kaumodakī mace and others). He is distinguished by his characteristic marks like Śrīvatsa (on his bosom).

28. In that age, people desirous of knowing the Supreme Brahman worship that Supreme Man characterised by the emblem of a sovereign emperor (white umbrella, chouries, etc.) with (the rites prescribed both in) the Vedas and Tantra texts.

29. Salutations to Vāsudeva, bow to Saṅkarṣaṇa; obeisance to Pradyumna and Aniruddha, to you O glorious Lord (in the four manifestations or Vyūhas).

30. Hail to the (perfect) sage Nārāyaṇa, the Supreme person, the All-pervading Lord, the Ruler of the Universe, the Indwelling Soul of all created beings.

31. It is in this manner, O Lord of the earth, that they extol the Ruler of the universe. Now listen to me how people worship him with rites prescribed in various Tantric Texts.

32. It is known to all that highly intelligent and discerning people, through sacrifices mostly consisting of chanting his name and extolling his glory, worship that Lord of dark complexion but brilliant (like Sapphire) in lustre. The Lord who is perfect in every limb, beautified with ornaments (like Kaushtubha gem and others), equipped with his weapons and missiles (like the discus Sudarśana) and accompanied with his attendants (like Sunanda and others).

33. O Supreme Person ! Protector of the votaries (who bow to your feet), I salute your lotus-feet which are even worthy of being meditated upon, which end all the insults and insubordinations (suffered from the members of the family and one's own sense-organs), bestow all the desired objects, the resort of all sacred places, are praised by god Śiva and Brahmā, an asylum—worthy of taking refuge, annihilate the afflictions of your servants (devotees) and which is a boat for crossing the sea of Samsāra.

34. O the most religious-minded King (Nimi), I bow to the lotus-feet which, at the word of his father (Daśaratha), resigned his prosperous kingdom which was covetable even to gods and hence was very difficult to give up, and departed to the forest, and which gave chase to an illusory deer which was desired by his beloved (Sītā)—To those lotus-feet I bow, O exalted Person.

35. In this manner, O King, glorious Lord Hari, who confers all blessings, is worshipped under different names and forms appropriate to the Age (e g. Kṛta, Tretā) by men belonging to the particular Age.

36. Noble discerning persons who know the excellences and essentials, appreciate Kali Age in which all the desired ideals in human life are fully accomplished by merely singing the name and deeds of Hari.

37. To persons who are wandering in the cycle of Samsāra in this world, there is no higher gain than this<sup>1</sup> (glorification and singing the name and deeds of the Lord); for it is by virtue of it, that a person attains sublime serenity and the Sam-sāra in his case comes to an end.

38. Persons belonging to the ages like Kṛta and others (Tretā and Dvāpara) wish to be born in the Kali Age, O King. It is certainly in the Kali age alone that persons exclusively devoted to Lord Nārāyaṇa will be born.

39-40. O great King ! such (exclusive devotees of Lord Nārāyaṇa) will be born in some place here and there (in Kali age), but a majority of them will be born in the Dravidian lands wherein flow the rivers, the Tāmraparṇī, the Kṛta-mālā, the Payasvinī, the sacred-most Kāverī and the western Mahānadi. People who drink water from these rivers become pure in heart and generally turn into votaries of the glorious Lord Vāsudeva, O ruler of men.

41. (With the realisation that Lord Vāsudeva abides everywhere and hence) entertaining no notion of difference (or absolutely giving up all duties prescribed by Śāstras, he, who, with all his heart, seeks resort in Mukunda (Viṣṇu), the shelter of all beings, is under no obligations of gods, sages, creatures, relatives and people, nor is he the servant of any of these. (Hence the performance of the pañca-mahāyajñas which is obligatory for all according to Śāstras, is not applicable to him. He is above the prescriptions and interdictions of the Śāstras).

42. (A devotee stands in no need of expiation for the non-observance of the prescriptions of Dharma). As Lord Hari, the Supreme Ruler, abides in the heart of his devotee who sought shelter at his feet, giving up attachment to his body, etc., (and is not propitiating any other god), the devotee (does not go astray but) if perchance, he commits any sin (due to the force of previous karma), Lord Hari absolves him of all sins.

Nārada said :

43. Thus having listened to the exposition of the course of duties meant for the devotees of the glorious Lord, Nimi, the king of Mithilā, became highly delighted. Accompanied by his family priest, he duly worshipped the nine sages, the sons of Jayantī.

44. Thereupon, immediately all the Siddhas vanished while all people remained merely looking on. The king also practised the duties (the Bhāgavata way of propitiating the Lord) and attained to the highest state (viz. Mokṣa).

45. O highly fortunate Vasudeva ! If entertaining no attachment and with devout faith, you follow the Bhāgavata course of conduct, you also will reach the highest goal.

46. The whole world is filled with the fame of you both (Vasudeva and your queen Devakī) as the Supreme Lord Hari is pleased to accept you as his parents (lit. is pleased to be your son).

47. Your soul has been already purified by cherishing parental affection to Kṛṣṇa (as your son) by his sight, embrace, conversation as also by sleeping and sitting with him and by feeding him.

48. If inimical Kings like Śiśupāla, Pauṇḍra, Śālva and others brooded over him with hatred (all the while) while sleeping, sitting, etc. and had their mind transformed, as it was deeply impressed with his gait, graceful activities, glances, etc. and could attain to the semblance of his personality (the Sarūpatā type of liberation), what need be said of those whose mind is deeply attached to him.

49. You should not entertain the notion that Lord Kṛṣṇa is your child; for he is the Supreme Ruler, the soul abiding in all beings, the immutable transcendence who has concealed his Supreme nature by assuming a human form, by the dint of his Māyā potency.

50. In order to annihilate the demonic Kṣatriyas who, being veritable Asuras, were a burden to the earth and for the protection of the good and for conferring liberation from Samsāra on them, Lord Kṛṣṇa has descended on the earth, and his glory spreads all over the universe.

Śrī Śuka said :

51. Having listened to this, the highly fortunate Vasudeva and the blessed-most Devakī were extremely astonished and the infatuation (of parental affection to Kṛṣṇa) was dissipated (from their mind).

52. Whoever with a concentrated mind understands and retains in memory the sacred account (of the discourses of nine Siddhāṣṭ) will shake off the illusion (of Samsāra) here and become eligible to attain the Brahma-hood.

CHAPTER SIX

Lord Kṛṣṇa Requested to return to Vaikuṇṭha : Uddhava's Desire to follow him

Śrī Suka resumed :

1. Then after the departure of Nārada who discoursed with Vasudeva about the spiritual love discussed in previous chapters), god Brahmā accompanied with his (mind-born) sons (like Sanaka, Sanandana and others), gods (such as Indra), and Lords of creation (e.g. Marīci and others) approached Kṛṣṇa at Dvārakā. And god Śiva who blesses all beings with happiness or the Lord of the past and the future creation, also came there, surrounded by hosts of goblins.

2-4. The divine Lord Indra with Maruts (the forty-nine wind-gods), the (twelve) sun-gods, (eight) Vasus, two Aśvini-Kumāras (divine physicians), R̥bhus, Aṅgirās, (eleven) Rudras, (the group of ten deities known as) Viśve-devas, the Sādhyas and other divinities, Gandharvas (celestial musicians), Apsarās (divine damsels and dancers), Nāgas, Siddhas, Cāraṇas, Yakṣas, Sages, Manes, or human ancestors, along with Vidyādharas and Kinnaras—all arrived together at Dvārakā with a desire to see Lord Kṛṣṇa—Kṛṣṇa who, by his attractive personality, fascinated the minds of all human beings, and spread all over the worlds his glory which washes off the sins of all people.

5. In that city brilliant with the splendour of abounding prosperity and affluence, they, with unsatiated eyes, gazed at the wonderful form of Lord Kṛṣṇa.

6. They covered the foremost of Yadus (i.e. Lord Kṛṣṇa) with (garlands of) flowers available only in the celestial garden (like Nandana) and eulogised that Lord of the universe, with hymns couched in charming words conveying wonderful thoughts (arranged as in rhetorics).

Gods praised :

7. With our reasoning faculty, cognitive and conative senses, our vital principle (activating our bodies), mind and speech, we lay ourselves prostrate O Lord, at your lotus feet<sup>1</sup> which are contemplated upon within their hearts by those who are full of devotion unto you and wish to extricate themselves from the complicated strong noose (net) of Karmas. But we are wonderfully lucky on visualizing you directly while bowing, for the meditators can merely contemplate without seeing you.

8. Stationed (as a controller) in the three guṇas (sattva, rajas and tamas), you create, protect and destroy this manifest, incomprehensible universe within yourself through your Māyā power consisting of its three guṇas. But, O invincible Lord, you are not at all affected by any of these acts (mentioned above). For you are absolutely free from attachment and other defects and are completely absorbed in your obvious eternal, essential bliss.

9. O praise-worthy Lord ! The purification of the minds of persons with evil propensities (like sensualism, etc.) does not effectively take place to that extent, through worship, learning, Vedic studies, charitable gifts, penance and other ritualistic acts (prescribed in Śāstras) as that brought about in the minds of persons with sāttvika nature, through the ever-increasing pure faith and devotion engendered by listening to your glory, O Supreme Lord.

10. May your feet be like a fire to burn down our inauspicious and evil inclinations (to enjoy worldly pleasures,) —your feet which are born (i.e. contemplated) by sages in their hearts moistened (with devotion), for the sake of the summum bonum (or Mokṣa), which are worshipped by your devotees in Your (four) manifestations (viz Vāsudeva, Śaṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha) for the attainment of glory similar to you which, the self-possessed and intelligent ones (out of your votaries) worship three time a day<sup>2</sup>, with a desire to transcend the

1. ŚR quotes a traditional verse which gives a different list of the eight parts of the body in prostration (āṣṭāṅga namaskāra) They are : feet, hands, knees, chest, head, sight, mind and speech. The verse is as follows :

dorbhyām padābhyām jānubhyām urasā śirasā dṛṣā /
manasā vacasā ceti prapñamā'ṣṭāṅga tṛitah||

2. Savanaśaḥ (Literally) : According to the time when the soma juice is extracted out of the Soma plant in a sacrifice, which is done three times a day, viz. in the morning, at noon and in the evening.

Svarga (and attain directly Vaikunṭha which is beyond the region called Svarga).

11. (Your feet)—which are contemplated upon, O Lord, by sacrificers taking in their palms purified and controlled (by Śāstric injunctions), the oblation according to the procedure laid down in the three Vedas, for offering them into the sacrificial fire<sup>1</sup> and which are meditated upon by Yogins in their Yogic practice with a view to comprehending your Māyā (the bestower of super-human mystic powers) and thereby aspiring to possess those powers<sup>2</sup>, and which are worshipped every-where (and at all times) by the highest type of your votaries (who are free from all desires), for the sake of liberation from Samsāra.

12. O Lord ! May your feet ever act as a fire burning down all evil propensities in our hearts—your feet which accept with pleasure, as duly offered, articles of worship, the faded garlands of forest flowers (offered by your devotees) with which even this glorious goddess Lakṣmī envies like a rival co-wife.

13. O glorious Lord ! May your feet purify all the sins of us, your votaries—your feet, O perfect and almighty Lord, which (at the time of ousting Bali from his kingdom) covered the universe in three strides but which (in the second stride) reached Satyaloka, whence it shone as the topmost flag of which the river Gaṅgā flowing over the three worlds, became a threefold streamer; which struck terror and assured from

1. ŚR raises the objection that in a sacrifice the deity (e.g. Indra) to whom the oblation is to be offered, is to be contemplated by pronouncing the word Vaśaś and not the Lord, and answers that whatever deity is thus contemplated, it is the Lord of the sacrifice who is ultimately meditated, though the deity to whom oblation is so offered be Indra or Varuṇa, etc.

EK. separates the Yogis from the seekers of Siddhis. According to EK. (1) sacrificers, (2) Yogis, (3) Seekers of the nature of the Māyā and (4) the highest types of desire-less votaries meditate upon the Lord's feet. These votaries realize that the Lord is every-where, hence they worship him so.

—EB : 6.122-137.

2. Out of six categories of the servants of the Lord, viz. sages, Sātva-tas, Ātma-vids (Seekers after the Self), sacrificers, Yogis and the highest votaries, the last type of devotees are more beloved of the Lord than even goddess Lakṣmī—ŚR.

fear the armies of Asuras and gods respectively and which leads the righteous to the heaven and the wicked to the hell.

14.* May the feet of the Supreme Person (Puruṣottama) enhance our happiness—Puruṣottama under whose control as the Time-Spirit, all embodied beings like god Brahmā and others who are harassing each other (by warfare, etc.) obey like bulls controlled by the nose-string (perforated through their nose) and (you) who are transcendent to both Prakṛti and Puruṣa.

15. You are the Supreme Person (Puruṣottama) the ultimate cause of the emergence, continuance, and disappearance of this universe. The Śrutis call you, the Time-Spirit, as the controller and destroyer of Prakṛti, Puruṣa and the Mahat (principle of cosmic intelligence). As time (counted by a year of twelve months), you possess three navels (three four-monthly periods of the Summer, the rainy season and the winter) and with inexorable yet imperceptible speed, you are engaged in finishing with all.<sup>1</sup>

16.** Having derived seminal power from you, the Puruṣa (Īśvara) of unfailing energy deposits with Māyā the principle called Mahat like a child in the womb, that Mahat, being endowed with that seminal force creates out of itself this golden egg (universe) with its (seven external) sheaths<sup>2</sup> enveloping it.

17. O Lord of sense-organs ! Inasmuch as you are not attached even while enjoying the objects of senses evolved by * VJ. takes the presiding deities of the senses which cause pleasure or pain as the 'gods' who are under the control of Hari's feet. The nose-string is the span of life of hundred years. The Lord has no attachment to these embodied beings. The almighty Time-Spirit is superior to Prakṛti and Puruṣa.

1. Cf. asmāt kṣaram atīto'ham

** VJ. gives a Purāṇic turn to this process of evolution as follows : Pradhāna=Lakṣmi, Mahat=the four-faced god Brahmā, Śeṣa=Ahaṁkāra. But the explanation is complicated : Parabrahman or Nārāyaṇa sported with Lakṣmi during mahā-pralaya, brought forth Puruṣa who infused his energy into Lakṣmi (Pradhāna) and the four-faced god called Puruṣa and Gāyatri called Pradhāna are created and Gāyatri called Śraddhā through Gāyatri known as Pradhāna".

2. The Sheaths are : the five gross elements, the mind and ego.

the modification of the guṇas—the attributes of your Māyā, you are, therefore, the sovereign Lord of the mobile and im-mobile creations, while other jīvas (or even Yogins) are afraid of (i.e. are bound by longing for) the objects of enjoyment they have renounced or do not exist.

18. You are unattached to the sense-objects for with all their seductive charms (like arrows of the god of Love) and other erotic ways of effectively conveying the messages of love communicated by their arched eyebrows expressing their heart-felt love and through their smiles and side-glances, your sixteen thousand wives were not able to affect or agitate your mind.

19. The streams of nectar in the form of your sweet stories and rivers like the Gaṅgā that flow forth washing your feet—both are capable of deterring all the sins of the three worlds. Your votaries who abide by the pure duties prescribed for their stage of life and class in the society partake of both kinds of Tirthas (holy waters)—one in the form of your glories extolled in the Vedas and the other the water of the Gaṅgā flowing forth from your feet—the former, by means of their ears and the latter, with their bodies.

20. God Brahmā, the performer of a hundred sacrifices, accompanied by god Śiva and other celestials eulogized Lord Hari (in a hymn) and standing up in the sky (all the while) bowed to Kṛṣṇa and submitted the following prayer.

Brahmā said :

21. O Lord ! You were formerly entreated by us to relieve the earth of her burden; that has been accomplished by you according to our prayer; O Indwelling Soul of all.

22. The righteous course of life has been firmly established by you among the pious people who are pledged to the truth. Your glory which washes off the sins of all the world, has been diffused in all directions.

23. Incarnating yourself in the race of Yadu, and assuming excellent-most charming form, you have performed deeds of extra-ordinary powers for the good of the world.

24. O controller of the World ! Those righteous people who, in the Kali age, listen to and extol your (sportive) deeds, will easily cross the darkness (of Samsāra).

25. O Supreme Person, hundred and twenty five Autumns (years) have elapsed since your worship appeared in the family line of Yadu, O Lord.

26. O Support of the universe ! No work that was to be achieved for the sake of gods, has remained unaccomplished. As to your race, it is as good as extinct through the curse of Brāhmaṇas.

27. If you are pleased to approve of it, be pleased to re-enter your own supreme abode and protect us, your servants along with all the worlds and their guardian deities (by blessing us with a visit to our region and accepting worship from us).

The Venkaṭeśvara edition adds

Śrī Śuka said :

27-A. The glorious Lord Kṛṣṇa who was thus praised by gods like Brahmā and others, the Lord who assumed a human form through his Māyā, approved of their prayer and replied to them, O King.

The Lord replied :

28. I have already determined whatever you have spoken to me, O Chief of Gods. All of your work has been accomplished and the burden of the earth has been lightened.

29. That this clan of Yādavas, grown insolent by their prowess, valour (required for defence and aggression in battle) and affluence, is desirous of subjugating the whole world, but like unto the shore keeping in check (the flow-tide of) the ocean, I have controlled them.<sup>1</sup>

30. If I depart from the earth without destroying this enormous clan of power-drunk, insolent Yadus, the whole world shall be destroyed by this surging tide of Yadus which has crossed its limits.

31. The process of annihilation of the Yādava family

1. VJ : Yādavas....are desirous of returning to celestial region (Yādavas were the gods who descended in the Yādava race to help God achieve His purpose. They are naturally eager to return to their own region).

(Būṭ this interpretation is not consistent with the next verse).

has been already set in motion by the curse of Brāhmaṇas. It is after the complete destruction of this race that I shall visit your region (en route to Vaikuṇṭha). O sinless Brahmadeva.

Śrī Suka resumed :

32. Thus, addressed by Kṛṣṇa, the Lord of the universe, the self-born god Brahmā paid obeisance to him and returned to his region along with the hosts of gods.

33. Then, noticing that serious evil omens were appearing over the city of Dvārakā, the Lord advised the elderly Yadus who had assembled there.

The glorious Lord said :

34. These extremely ominous portents are verily appearing on all sides; and an imprecation from Brāhmaṇas which is very difficult to avert, has now been pronounced against our race.

35. Hence, it is not desirable to stay any longer here, if we wish to remain alive, O elderly Yādavas. Let us start just today to go to the highly sacred place Prabhāsa. Please do not delay any further.<sup>1</sup>

36. It was at Prabhāsa, that the moon god who, under the curse of Dakṣa, was affected with consumption, but was immediately cured of the disease by performing ablutions in the sacred waters thereof, regained the waxing of his digits.

37-38. Let us perform ablutions in the sacred waters thereof (at Prabhāsa) and please our manes (ancestors) and gods by offering libation of water. Let us also feed worthy Brāhmaṇas with dainty, tasteful food and devoutly donate valuable gifts to deserving persons. It will be by virtue of our precious charitable gifts that we shall cross over (i.e. be absolved of) all our sins, as people cross the sea with the help of boats.

1. ŚR explains that Yādavas who were aṁśas of Devas were not eligible immediately to attain Mokṣa. Had they died at Dvārakā, they would have straight-way attained Mokṣa like the flight of bird. Hence Kṛṣṇa led them to Prabhāsa whereafter death, they would attain immediate prosperity and gradually attain Liberation in due course.

Śrī Śuka said :

39. Directed by the Lord in this way, O delight of your family, the Yādavas made up their minds to shift to that sacred place and began to get ready their chariots.

40-41. O King, observing these (preparations of Yādavas) and having heard the advice given by the Lord, and noticing the terrible portents, Uddhava, who was earnestly devoted to and waiting upon Lord Kṛṣṇa, approached him in a secluded place (i.e. when he was alone). He bowed at the feet of the Lord of the rulers of the world, with his head and with folded palms, he submitted to Kṛṣṇa as follows :

42. “O Supreme Ruler of gods, O Master of yoga, O Lord of hallowing glory, I believe that your lordship means to depart from this world after exterminating this Yādava race, inasmuch as, you, though competent to do so, did not counteract the curse of Brāhmaṇas.

43. O Keśava, I cannot bear separation from you even for half a moment. Hence, O Lord, take me also with you to your region.

44. Your sportive acts, O Kṛṣṇa, which are highly auspicious to people, are sweet like nectar to the ear after tasting which once, people cease to have any other craving for wealth, wives, children.

45. How can we, your devotees who have attended upon you while you were in bed, were sitting, wandering, staying at home, bathing, playing or having your meal, live without you (lit. abandon you) who are our very soul. (We shall not be able to bear separation from you).

46. (It is not through the fear of Māyā that we pray you thus. We, your slaves, who adorn ourselves with garlands, scents, garments and ornaments enjoyed and given up by you and ate the remnants of your food, shall certainly overcome your Māyā.

47. Sages who subsist on air,<sup>1</sup> who exert themselves in penance and observe strict celibacy for life, become tranquil, sinless renouncers of worldly life and attain to your abode called Brahman.

1. v.l. Vāta-raśanāḥ—who are sky-clad i.e. naked.

48-49. But we, O great yogin, who wander in this world through the paths of Karma will cross over the impassable darkness (of Samsāra) by conversing with fellow-devotees about you, remembering and glorifying your acts, speech, movements, smiles, glances and jokes and whatever you did to carry out your role as a human being.”

50. When thus implored (by Uddhava) O king Lord Kṛṣṇa, the Son of Devakī addressed his exclusively devoted servant<sup>1</sup> and beloved devotee Uddhava as follows :

CHAPTER SEVEN

*Śrī Kṛṣṇa's Spiritual Guidance to Uddhava :
The Legend of the Avadhūta and his Preceptors*

The Lord replied :

1. O highly blessed Uddhava ! What you have spoken to me (about my future plans (Supra 6.42) has been decided by me (to execute). God Brahmā, Śiva and guardians of the spheres eagerly desire my (return and) stay in heaven (i.e. Vaikuṇṭha).

2. The mission—the work of gods—for which I incarnated along with a ray of mine (my aṁśa—Balarāma) on the earth in response to the prayer of Brahmā, has been completely accomplished by me.

3. The clan (of Yādavas), already consumed as it is by the imprecation (of the Brāhmaṇas) will surely be exterminated by mutual infighting and the sea will overflow and submerge this city on the seventh day (when I am no more here).

1. EK : Uddhava was such a beloved servant of Kṛṣṇa that he had access to him when Kṛṣṇa's nearest and dearest relatives, his chief queen Rukmīṇī, his parents, sons like Pradyumna were not allowed to see him and Kṛṣṇa used to give his choicest gifts to Uddhava.

4. As soon as I leave this world, it will, before long, lose all its auspiciousness, as it will be overcome by Kali (the Dark Age), O pious one.

5. You should not live here any longer when I have withdrawn myself from this world; for in this Kali Age men will be more interested in unrighteous ways.

6. You also should give up all attachment and friendship with your kith and kin and concentrating your mind on me firmly, you wander over the earth looking upon all with impartiality.

7. Whatever is perceived by mind, speech, eyes, ears (and other cognitive and conative senses), know that that is a product of Māyā and mind and that it is transient.

8.* The notion of difference or diversity is the misapprehension of a distracted and unrestrained mind. It results in good and evil consequences. (It may be argued that by its enjoining of injunctions and interdictions, the Veda supports the notion of difference. But that is not correct). The distinc-

* (i) EK. A person who forgets the identity of his Soul with the Supreme Soul conceives the misapprehension of diversity and develops the notion of good and evil. This notion leads to the triad of karma, akarma and vikarma. All physical, verbal and mental activities are karma. The act when performed (without attachment) leaves no 'seed' (the effect or fruit of the karma). Such a 'seedless' act is Akarma. The act which is done irrespective of its prescriptive or prohibitive nature is Vikarma. As the jīva is born out of Avidyā all his acts are due to and full of Avidyā (EB.7.57-71.)

(ii) VR. : (The gist only) The Paramātmān is one and all other entities form a part of his body and are controlled by him. To regard independence of entities is misapprehension. A person with such misapprehension experiences pleasure, pain, etc.

Karma=The prescribed act (both of daily routine and occasional).

Akarma=a prohibited act.

Vikarma=an act giving various fruits (vividha-phalāya Coditam Kāmyam Karma).

A person with the notions of good and evil is disturbed with the thought of Karmas and their consequences.

(iii) The notion of one's own agency of acts irrespective and independent of God creates good and evil and the snare of samsāra; one who knows that the God is the real agent or doer, is liberated. Due to Rajas and Tamas, the mind is confused with karma, akarma, etc.—VJ.

tion between the prescribed act, its non-commission and prohibited action is meant for the guidance of those who possess the misapprehension of good and evil (The Veda is for the guidance of those who are affected with avidyā).

9. Therefore, controlling all your sense-organs and concentrating your mind (on me, train yourself to) visualize all this vast universe within your own self and to see that your own soul in (i.e. identical with) Me, the Brahman (The identity of the Brahman and the Soul explains the latter's capacity to pervade or contain within itself the whole universe).

10. Being well-equipped with the knowledge (of the essential teachings) of the Vedas and the Self-realization (of those teachings) and the realization of the identity of your soul with the (souls of) all embodied beings, you become stated with the (Supreme) bliss of self-realization and you shall experience no obstacles (from gods, etc.)<sup>1</sup>

11. He who is above the sense of good and evil is like an innocent child. He does not desist from a prohibited act with the consciousness of its being evil (but due to his previous hallowed impressions—good saṁskāras that he abstains from doing an evil act). Nor does he perform a prescribed act with the desire of deriving its good fruit (but his pious saṁskāras lead him to do so. Hence, there is no danger of such person becoming way-ward).

12. He is a friend and well-wisher of all beings, tranquil in mind, possessed of firm knowledge (of Vedānta) and its realization. He looks upon the Universe as identical with me. Verily he is never involved in the miseries of saṁsāra.

Śrī Śuka said :

13. Uddhava, the great devotee of the Lord, who was thus instructed by the glorious Lord Kṛṣṇa, became eager to know the truth. He prostrated himself before Acyuta (Śrī Kṛṣṇa) and submitted as follows:

Uddhava said :

14. O Lord (bestower of the fruit) of Yoga, O ultimate secret treasure of the knowers of Yoga or the abode of Yoga, O embodiment of Yoga O the source (the first propounder) of Yoga<sup>1</sup>, renunciation without any expectation in return (which is the characteristic of sannyāsins) has been taught to me by you for my Final Beatitude (or Mokṣa).

15. But I think that such renunciation of desires is very difficult to practise, O Perfect Lord, for those whose minds are addicted to sense-objects (of pleasure)—nay it is all the more difficult—(practically) impossible—by those who are not your devotees, O the Indwelling Soul of all beings.

16. O Lord, I am ignorant. My mind is deluded with the notion of 'I-ness' (my identity with my body) and 'mine-ness' (the notion that all my wife, children, property, etc. are mine) created by your Māyā. Hence, O Lord, instruct (this servant of yours in such a way as he (I) can practise it and attain that (degree of) renunciation propounded by you.

17. I do not see even among gods who can expound to me the nature of the Soul except You who are self-illuminated (all-knowing) Ātman and the only Reality. All the embodied gods like Brahmā and others have their minds deluded by Māyā and look upon external objects as the only reality.

18. Being scorched by miseries in life, my mind had

1. Uddhava gave these epithets to Śrī Kṛṣṇa to imply that your above-mentioned teaching is meant for Yogis and sannyāsins, but what about your ignorant devotees like me who are not competent to practise it—ŚR.

* VR. adds : (Their minds are deluded by Māyā which is not removed by mere reasoning and argument of those who make enquiries about it, unless they associate themselves with the Lord's devotees who have the experience (of bliss) of the lotus-feet of the Lord. Such association is possible even to those who lead a householder's life and have undergone three types of miseries and their burden of sins being thus lightened, they are less inclined to sensual pleasures (tāpa-trayā' bhi-taptānām . . . nṛṇāṃ khaḷu sat-saṅgamaḥ syāt natu viṣaya-lālasānām)).

The Lord said :

19. It is well known that persons who investigate with themselves (even without the guidance of a spiritual preceptor) the true nature of the world, lift themselves by self-effort and become free from longings for worldly pleasures.

20. The Ātman (Soul) is the real preceptor and guide of oneself, especially in the case of human beings; for he can arrive at what is his own good by (rational logical reasoning using the tools of knowledge like) direct perception and inference.

21. It is in human life that people of mature judgement who are experts in the Paths of Knowledge. (Sāṅkhya) and Yoga, realize me quite distinctly as being endowed with all powers.

22. Many (categories of) bodies with one foot, two feet, three feet, four feet, multiple-footed and foot-less have been created by me. Out of them the human body is the dearest to me.

23. In this human body those who are alert and vigilant, directly endeavour to find me, the Supreme Ruler who cannot be ascertained by means of the qualities or attributes (of jīva such as intelligence) which are themselves within the range of perception or by inference<sup>2</sup> (based on inferable evidence).

24. As an illustration on this subject, they narrate the

VJ. reads aharahaḥ for nirviṇṇadhīriha muhu in ŚR. It means 'everyday I am being scorched, etc.' Both the v.l.s are good emendations for ahamu ha.

2. ŚR. cautions that Ātmā should not be regarded as inferable. By inference we know that Ātmā is distinct from tangible objects like the body and from inferable objects as well. By inference we can understand Ātmā's distinctness from the body, attributelessness and pure nature.

following ancient legend of a conversation between a recluse who had realized Brahman and was of immeasurable splendour and king Yadu (of immense power and intellectual brilliance)

25. On seeing a certain youthful, Brāhmaṇa ascetic<sup>1</sup>, a knower of Brahman full of (spiritual) wisdom wandering fearlessly, king Yadu, an expert in Dharma put to him the following question:

Yadu said :

26. Whence did you, though (apparently) inactive, come to possess such extraordinary penetrating intelligence and wisdom (in so youthful a stage), endowed with which and enlightened (in the nature of Brahman) you roam about in this world like a child.

27. Generally men try to attain religious merit, wealth and enjoyment. They evince desire to know the nature of the Soul but they are motivated with a desire for longevity, fame and fortune.

28. You are physically capable (able-bodied), wise, skilful and alert, good-looking, nectarlike sweet in speech (and none of the factors which cause indifference or incapability in active life like weakness, ignorance, want of skill or ugliness are found in You). Still you behave as if you are a dunce, lunatic or as one haunted by a ghost.

29. While people are burnt with the forest conflagration in the form of passions, and covetousness, you are not even touched by that fire and stand immune like an elephant immersed in the waters of the Gaṅgā (and hence untouched by a forest-fire).

30. Be pleased to explain to us who are making this enquiry seriously, the cause of your blissfulness in your own self, even though you are devoid of objects of pleasure and are leading a single (unmarried life), O knower of Brahman.

The glorious Lord Kṛṣṇa said :

31. When respectfully questioned thus by the highly intelligent Yadu who was friendly to Brāhmaṇas, the blessed Brāhmaṇa sage, duly honoured, explained to Yadu as he stood bowing to him in modesty.

The Brāhmaṇa (Dattātreya) explained :

32. Many are my preceptors whom I have selected (and accepted) through my own judgement, O King. Please listen to the names of those preceptors from (each of) whom I assimilated (some specific) wisdom and I wander all over the world free (from worldly troubles).

33-35. The earth, the air, the ether, water, fire, the moon, the sun, the pigeon, the boa-constrictor, the sea, the moth, the bee, the elephant, the honey-gatherer, the deer, the fish, the courtesan Piṅgalā, the osprey, the child, the maiden, the blacksmith, the serpent, the spider and the wasp—these twentyfour have been adopted as teachers by me. It is from their special ways of behaviour that I imbibed whatever lessons were useful to me in life.

36. I shall explain to you fully what lessons I picked up from each preceptor, O son of Nahuṣa. Please do understand them, O tiger among men.

37. From the earth, I learnt the vow (of firmness and forbearance) to remain undisturbed even when trodden over (and mal-treated) by other beings. With the full knowledge that they (these oppressors) are working under the influence and will of the Providence, a strongminded wise person should not deviate from his path of duty (dharma).

38. As a disciple of the mountain (which is a part of the earth and the products from which such as trees, grass, water-currents are meant for the use of others) a righteous person should learn to resign all his activities for the good of other beings. And also as a pupil of the tree (which is another part of the earth and which allows itself to be cut, uprooted and transplanted at the will of others), he should learn that he is meant for others and be useful according to their will.

39. Just as the wind in the form of the life-breath (expects food and water for subsistence and not form, taste and other objects of senses), a sage should be satisfied with bare necessities of subsistence and not crave for objects of sense-pleasure. He should however manage to take in that much (which may not result in starvation) which (if not taken) would cloud his mental faculty and obscure his knowledge; nor should he get his mind and speech distracted (by the desire for sense-objects).

40. Just as the wind is unattached (to the natural beauty or the burning of the forest), a yogi, though participating in the surrounding objects of senses of various characteristics (such as hot, cold, sweet and others), should keep his mind aloof and unattached from the excellences and defects of these sense-objects.

41. Just as the wind, though a carrier of scents and odours (which are due to the particles of the earth wafted by it), is distinct from the smell, a yogi should bear in mind that though he has entered the earthly bodies and (is the basis of and hence) appears to possess their characteristics (such as childhood, youth, fatness, slimness, etc.), and have his sight (mind) fixed on his self which is distinct from the body and its attributes.

42. A contemplative sage should comprehend that his soul though invested with the physical body, is identical with Brahman and as such interpenetrates and permeates all mobile or immobile creation—all-pervading yet unconnected like the sky<sup>1</sup>, (which is unlimited and untouched by other objects).

43. Just as the sky is not touched by the clouds tossed about by the wind, the Person (Soul) is not affected by the products of the Time-spirit and by things such as fire, water and food.

44. Water in a holy spot is by nature pure, smooth, soft and sweet and purifying by sight, touch and chanting of its name. Similarly, a sage should become a friend of men and make them pure (by absolving them from sins). (The Avadhūta learnt this from water).

45. 'The Avadhūta learnt from the fire to be Brilliant

1. VJ.*s v.1. nabhorat vitatasya—'all-pervading like the sky' is better than ŚR.'s nābhastvam vitatasya.

(with his spiritual knowledge), aflame (as his supreme knowledge is enhanced and made brighter like a flaming fire), formidable (as the sage remains unperturbed even under stress), with his belly as his vessel (for keeping food i.e. completely devoid of all belongings). Like fire, a self-controlled yogi does not take in what is impure, though he may accept anything and everything offered to him.

46. Like the fire (sometimes lying hidden in the fuel or ashes), the sage remains unnoticed (among common men); sometimes (like a fire ablaze) he becomes known to others and is worshipped by the seekers of spiritual good. (Just as the fire consumes only what is offered as oblation in sacrifices) the sage eats whatever is offered by pious donors and burns down the sins committed by them in the past and the future.

47. Just as the fire assumes the shape and size of the fuel (e.g. a log of wood, etc.) in which it abides, the all-pervading Lord-Ātman—(though unrelated to the body) appears to possess that size and shape of the bodies whether high or low (like that of gods and sub-human beings) in which he has entered, after creating it through his Māyā.

48. The six stages beginning with birth and ending with death, which are brought about by the Time-spirit of unmanifest course, belong to the body and not to the Soul, just as the appearance and disappearance of the digits of the moon are caused by the Time to the digits of the moon and not to the moon itself.

49. The births and deaths of bodies though eternally taking place due to the inexorable force of Time flowing like a rushing torrent, do not affect the Soul, just as there is a beginning and end to the flames of fire and not to the Fire itself.

50. Just as the sun evaporates the water with its rays and is not affected (either by sucking up water or showering it as rain), a yogi enjoys the objects of senses with his senses or rejects them according to the (exigencies of) time, but he is in no way attached to those objects.

51. To those who regard the gross, physical body as the Ātman, the Ātman though essentially one, is regarded as different due to the different bodies wherein he abides, just as the Sun, though one, but when reflected in different reflecting media, appears as many (and different) to persons of gross understanding (the Ātman though one appears as many and different, due to its limiting conditions (upādhis)).

52. Excessive attachment or over-association with anyone should never be contracted by a person. If he does so, he will come to grief like the dull-witted he-pigeon (in the following legend).

53. A certain dove built a nest on a tree, in a certain forest. He lived with his mate, a female dove, for some years.

54. Their hearts tied together with the bonds of love, the pair of pigeons led a conjugal life binding together each other's eyes with eyes, body with body and heart with heart.

55. It was in the mutual company that they slept, ate, flew about, stood, chatted, sported together and fearlessly wandered in the rows of forest trees.

56. The female dove satisfied his conjugal desires and was (reciprocally) treated with sympathetic affection by him. The dove, being of uncontrolled senses, procured for her whatever she desired, irrespective of the strain involved in obtaining it.

57. At the proper period, the female dove conceived for the first time, and laid down the eggs in the nest, in the presence of her mate.

58. In due time, by the inconceivable powers of the Lord, well-formed fledgelings with delicate body covered with soft down, were (by natural process) born out of the eggs.

59. The pair of parent birds who were so affectionate to their off-spring nourished their young ones and felt happy as they heard their chirping and sweet indistinct warbling.

60. The parents were greatly rejoiced at the soft touch of their wings, charming movements, sweet cooings and their approaching to meet them.

61. Deluded by Viṣṇu's Māyā potency, the hearts of those dull-witted birds were closely knit together by love and they reared their young ones (with anxious care).

62. On one occasion, the pair of parent-birds went out into the forest in search of food for their young ones. They wandered for a long time into the jungle.

63. By fateful chance, a fowler who went about in the forest, happened to see those young birds. He spread out his net and caught them, as they moved about their nest.

64. Both the male and female doves were always anxious to nourish their little ones, and they had gone out (in search of food) and returned when they gathered some.

65. Seeing that her young ones are caught in the net and crying, the female dove was overwhelmed with grief and rushed at them screaming.

66. Ensnared in the bonds of ever-increasing affection through the deluding Potency of the Lord, the mother-dove who saw her young ones caught in the net was bewildered and forgot herself, and was herself entangled therein.

67. Seeing his own young ones dearer to him than his own life and his own life-mate dear to him as his own self also caught up, the male dove was deeply distressed and bewailed sorrowfully :

68. "Alas ! Look at the calamity that has befallen me of scant merit and evil mind. I have been still unsatiated and have not accomplished any object in life. But my household life which is the source of three objects of life (puruṣārthas) is ruined.

69. My mate who was a match for me in all respects and agreeable in everything, looked upon her husband (me) as a deity. But (now) abandoning me in a desolate house, she is going to heaven with her good children.

70. Such as I am, bereaved of my wife and children, what interest have I to lead the miserable life of a helpless widower, in a deserted house?"

71. Even though he saw them (his mate and young ones) entangled in that net and struggling for life in the clutches of death, the poor, thoughtless dove flung himself in the snare.

72. Having caught the householder-dove, his female mate and young ones, the ruthless fowler was accomplished of his purpose and returned home.

73. In the same way, a householder of poor sense takes delight in conjugal life and with his mind perturbed, goes to ruin along with the family (kith and kin) while trying to maintain it like the bird-dove in the above legend.

74. Birth in the human life is like an open gate to Liberation from Saṃsāra. He who, having obtained such a birth as a human being, is still attached to the life of a householder, is regarded by the wise as a person fallen from eminence to which he has climbed.

CHAPTER EIGHT

*What the Avadhūta learnt from the Nine-Preceptors

1. Pleasure as well as pain engendered by the senses may be experienced in the celestial and internal regions by all embodied beings. A wise man, therefore, should not hanker after them, O King.

2. Like a boa-constrictor lying without any effort or activity, a sage should subsist himself on whatever food (providentially) comes to him (without any effort), irrespective of its taste (whether extremely delicious or distasteful) or of the quantity obtained (whether much or little).

3. If no food comes to the lot of a sage who vows to live only on the food that Providence sends to him, he should not exert for it, but like his (preceptor)—huge serpent, should lie down for days together without food but should not strive for it.

4. Though endowed with a body full of physical strength, mental energy and soundness of sense-organs, the sage should lie down remaining actionless yet sleepless. He should not strive to do anything for food, though he may possess powers of his sense-organs.

5. Like the limitless, unfathomable, unperturbable deep sea of clear translucent water, the sage should be quiet, absorbed in meditation, unviolable, inscrutable, unaffected by time, space, etc. and unperturbed by passions.

6. Just as a sea does not overflow its limit when rivers in floods fall into it, nor does it dry up with the drying up of rivers, the sage should not feel elated when his desires are fulfilled nor be depressed at disappointments, but should be completely devoted to Nārāyaṇa (and not pay attention to worldly objects).

7. On seeing a woman, a veritable deluding potency of God, a person who has control over his senses is fascinated with her alluring gestures and movements and like a moth flying into the fire, falls into dark hell.<sup>1</sup>

8. With his mind enticed by women, (wearing) gold ornaments, rich dress, and other things created by the deluding Potency of the Lord (Māyā), the infatuated person, losing his discrimination, regards them for his enjoyment and ruins himself like a moth in the fire.

9. Without causing any trouble to any householder, a sage should accept food only in small quantities and that too, barely sufficient for the maintenance of his body. In this respect he should follow the course of a bee.

10. Just as a bee collects honey from flowers big or small, a skilful and clever person should assimilate the essence of the Śāstras great and small.

11. A recluse should not accept alms with a view to storing (a part of) it, for the evening or for the next day. He should use no other vessel than his palms (for accepting food) and his stomach (as storage). He ought not to be a hoarder like the bee.

12. A recluse should not lay by any food for the evening or for the morrow. If he were to do so like a bee, he will perish along with his store.

13. A mendicant should not touch, even with his foot, a young woman (doll made of wood), for he will be bound

1. ŚR. quotes a famous verse which describes how a moth, a black-bee, an elephant, a deer and a fish fall a victim severally to the objects of senses like a form, scent, touch, sound and taste and the five symbolic preceptors from this verse onwards are meant to teach detachment from objects of senses. The verse quoted is as follows :

patan̄ga-mātāṅga-kuraṅga-bhṛṅga-mīnā hatāḥ pañcabhir eva pañca/ekāḥ pramāḍī sa katham na hanyate, yaḥ sevate pañcabhir eva pañca''

(with passion) like an elephant fettered while touching a female elephant!

14. A wise person should never try to contact a woman (of another person) for he should know that she is his veritable death, just as an elephant is killed by more powerful tuskers.

15. Wealth hoarded by greedy misers painstakingly is neither enjoyed by them nor it is given in charities but it is enjoyed by another powerful person (knowing the location of the treasure) and that also by still another even as a gatherer of honey knows the place of the honeycomb (the store of honey) by external indications and misappropriates it.

16. Just as a honey-gatherer (is the first enjoyer of honey collected by bees), a recluse is the first to enjoy the fruit (i.e. food prepared by householders) of the wealth amassed by the householders with great pains and which they expect to enjoy.

17. From the deer which got ensnared by being beguiled with the music (musical notes) of the hunter, an ascetic living in a forest should learn the lesson that he should not listen to vulgar songs (creating erotic passions). (He should rather listen to songs about the Lord).

18. It was while enjoying the vulgar dance, instrumental music and songs of young women that R̥ṣyaśṛṅga, the son of a female deer (from sage Vibhāṇḍaka) became a toy in the hands of those women.

19. A person being tempted by alluring tastes through his uncontrolled tongue, loses his reasoning capacity and meets his end like a thoughtless fish allured by baits.

20. By observing fast wise persons quickly bring under control all their senses except the tongue (the sense of taste) which grows all the more powerful during famishment.

21. Even if a person has controlled all other senses (except the tongue), he cannot really be said to have subdued them, till he has conquered the sense of taste. When the sense of taste is subdued, all the senses become controlled.

22. Formerly, in the city of Videha (i.e. Mithilā), there lived a courtesan called Piṅgalā. Please listen to what I have learnt from her O Prince.

23. On one occasion, the public woman adorned herself to exhibit her charms to the utmost, at the proper time, and waited outside the door with the intention of enticing a paramour to a rendezvous.

24. O prominent Person ! As she saw men passing by the way, she, being covetous for money, thought them to be wealthy patrons coming to pay her as her paramours.

25. When the passers-by came and went their way (ignoring her), the woman, who earned her living by prostitution, indulged in the (false) hope that some other wealthy man would turn up and could approach her with a rich fee.

26. In this way, her inordinate hopes being thwarted, she lost her sleep. She kept on standing at the door, going in and out till it was past midnight.

27. Due to frustration of her hopes of earning money, her mouth parched up, and she became dejected at heart. But the despondency caused by her anxiety engendered a sense of real happiness in her.

28. Now listen from me the song of the woman whose mind was utterly frustrated and disgusted : “Complete indifference to worldly objects is like unto a sword in a man’s hand to cut asunder the cords of desire.”

29. Dear King, just as a man without any spiritual knowledge cannot give up his sense of “mineness”, a person in whose mind the sense of complete dispassion (for worldly objects) has not dawned, will not be able to rid himself of the ties to the body.

Piṅgalā said :

30. Alas ! Look at the extent of delusion of mine who have not controlled my mind and senses. Thoughtless as I am, I covet the fulfilment of my desire even from a worthless paramour.

31. Ignoring this eternally proximate paramour (v z. the Indwelling Soul), capable of giving real delight and bestower of sumptuous wealth on me, I, in my infatuation, resorted to a contemptible fellow who is incapable of fulfilling my desires and who confers nothing but misery, fear, grief and delusion.

32. Alas ! I have uselessly put my soul to affliction by leading the life of a public woman—the most reproachable trade. By selling myself to a miserly pitiable woman-addict I expected to get wealth and pleasure.

33. What person other than myself would seek (for enjoyment) the male body which is like a house, the framework (like beams and rafters) of which is made of bones, covered with skin, hair and nails, provided with nine doors dissipating filth and full of dirty excretion and urine.

34. In the whole city of Videha (Mithilā), I am perhaps the only foolish and wicked woman who expect to get pleasure (from persons) other than this Acyuta who confers his own self to devotees.

35. He is the beloved-most friend, protector and the very Self of all embodied beings. I shall submit myself to him and enjoy myself with him like goddess Lakṣmī.

36. To what extent can men, subject to birth and death, and gods, who are overtaken by Time, give pleasures to their wives (for all pleasures have a beginning and an end).

37. It appears that Lord Viṣṇu has been pleased with me for some unknown act of mine (in my past life). Hence this dispassion which ultimately leads to happiness has been engendered in my heart, full of evil desires.

38. But for the grace of the Lord the afflictions of an unlucky woman like me would not have caused this feeling of disgust and renunciation which enables a person to cut asunder all attachment, and attains (mental) peace (and spiritual bliss).

39. Respectfully receiving on my head, the blessings (and the grace) of the Lord, I shall rid myself of vulgar desires caused by low associations, and seek shelter in the Supreme Lord.

40. Contented and subsisting on whatever comes to me by the will of Providence, I shall, with full faith in the Lord who is my own Self, enjoy myself with him as my beloved.

41. Who else is capable of protecting a person who has fallen in the deep well of Samsāra, and whose eyes (power of discrimination) are blinded by objects of senses and whose person is swallowed by the serpent (boa-constrictor) in the form of Time.

42. When a person observes that this world is practically devoured by the serpent in the form of Time, he becomes alert and is disgusted with all worldly objects. He realizes that his Ātman is the protector of his Self.

The Brāhmaṇa (Avadhūta) said :

43. Coming to this firm conclusion and having thus cut off the evil libidinous craving for paramours, she was established in serenity and took her seat on the bed.

44. Certainly (the state of being haunted by) hope is the greatest misery and freedom from hope is the happiest state, just as when Piṅgalā gave up all hope for a paramour, she enjoyed a happy sleep.

CHAPTER NINE

The Discourse of the Avadhūta Concluded

1. Acquisition of whatever persons crave most to possess is certainly the cause of misery. He who realizes this and (wishing to overcome his propensity for possession) becomes a complete 'Have-not', attains infinite happiness.

2. More powerful birds of prey which had got no piece of flesh, attacked and pecked the he-osprey who possessed one. But by dropping that flesh, it (the he-osprey) got relief and happiness.

3. I am not affected by honour or dishonour. I have no anxiety for my house, wife and children (as I have none). Like a child, I range over the world at will, sporting in the bliss of Ātman and delighted within my own Soul.

4. (O king, in this world) only two (types of) persons are free from anxiety and are immersed in the Supreme bliss—one is an innocent ignorant child and the other is one who has transcended the guṇas.

5. In a certain place, a maiden herself had to receive the guests who had come to see her (for selecting her as a bride) while her relatives (parents etc.) had gone out somewhere.

6. While she was pounding alone (secretly) paddy for entertaining them with food, the bangles of shell in her wrists began to give out loud jingling sound.

7. The intelligent girl felt it shameful (to disclose that the bride had to do such work), broke the bangles one by one till only two remained on each of her wrists.

8. Even the pair of bangles created a noise as she pounded (the paddy). She, therefore broke one from each pair (with the result that) no sound was produced from the remaining one.

9. O vanquisher of enemies, I learnt this lesson from her, while I was roaming over the world with the desire of knowing the true nature of the world.

10. If many persons live together there will be quarrels; if two live together there is a talk. Hence a person should wander alone without any companion like the single bangle on the wrist of the girl.

11. Having achieved firmness of the sitting posture and controlled the breath, a person should concentrate his mind (like an archer on his target and by means of renunciation and Yogic practice, he should vigilantly keep his mind steady.

12. The mind, when concentrated in him, sheds off gradually the particles of karma-dust. With the development of Sattva guṇa, he shakes off the Rājasic and Tāmasic tendencies and enters into Nirvāṇa, like a fire (automatically) extinguished (when the fuel is completely burnt). (Such a stage is known as asamprajñāta samādhi).

13. In that stage, a person whose mind is completely absorbed in the meditation of his Self, does not remain conscious of anything inside, or outside just as the manufacturer of shafts was so much absorbed in his work of making arrows that he was not aware of the procession of the king passing by his smithy.

14. Like a serpent a sage, therefore, should go about alone, (avoiding company of others), have no house, should always be vigilant (in his spiritual practice) and take shelter in caves<sup>1</sup>. He should see to it that he is not marked out by his behaviour (just as the poisonousness or non-poisonousness of a serpent is not discernible from his trail). He should be sparing of words and lead a solitary life.

15. In the case of man who himself is mortal, the attempt to build a house (and maintenance of a family, etc. implied in it) is fraught with great troubles and is fruitless ultimately. But a serpent enters into a house prepared by others (such as an ant-hill or a hole prepared by a mouse) and lives happily. A sage should emulate his example and not bother about constructing a residence.

16. Like a spider withdrawing its web spun out and spread over by it, the Almighty Lord Nārāyaṇa through his potency of time, withdraws, at the end of the Kalpa, this universe which he has created through his Māyā Potency.

17. The Supreme Lord (then) remains alone, one without a second<sup>2</sup> (i.e. devoid of any differentiation) himself self-supported (self-born). He was the support of all the universe. When he has reduced all his powers like sattva, rajas and tamas to the state of equilibrium with his own force called time, he exists as the First (Ancient-most, unborn) Person, the controller of Pradhāna (wherein all the Guṇas are merged) and of Puruṣa (that is of Matter and Spirit).

18. He is the highest goal to be attained by god Brahmā and other liberated Souls. He is designated (by Śrutis) as Kevala (Absolute, unconditioned). He is (as it were) a vast reservoir of absolute bliss unconditioned by any limitations.

19.* By his Potency (called time) which needs no other

1. VJ gives better interpretation : 'He should thoroughly and uninterruptedly be absorbed in the meditation of the Lord abiding in the cave of his heart'.

* VJ : He is not conditioned by a gross, physical body. He is the Antaryāmin (Inner controller) of Kāla (Time). At his own free will, he manifests himself through Time and agitates Māyā i.e. Prakṛti which is under his control and makes her prone to creation. He creates through Prakṛti, the thread (Sūtra) or (Prāṇa) and god Brahmā.

assistance, he agitated his Māyā constituted of three guṇas and (through this agitated Māyā) created the Sūtra (thread) or the principle called Mahat, O vanquisher of enemies (like lust, anger, etc. Hence, you need not be afraid of the power of this Sūtra or Mahat).

20.* They have declared the Sūtra to be the manifestation of three guṇas which evolves this universe of multifarious aspects. It is in the Sūtra that the universe is woven. It is due to Sūtra (in the form of vital breath that a person wanders through the cycle of births and deaths<sup>1</sup>).

21. Just as a spider extends through its mouth the cobweb from its heart, sports with it and again swallows it, so does the Supreme Ruler evolve, protect and withdraw the universe.

22. It may be out of love, hatred or fear, but on whatever object an embodied being concentrates his mind entirely, he attains to the semblance of that object.

23. The larva (captured and) confined in its (captor's) nest by the wasp, O King, continuously broods over it (through fear), and without losing its original body, it assumes (i.e. is transformed into) the semblance of the wasp.

24. In this manner, from these several preceptors I learnt this wisdom. Now listen as I shall explain to you the wisdom I learnt from my body, O king.

25. My body has been my preceptor as it causes in me dispassion and (engenders in me) discrimination. It creates dispassion as it is subject to birth and death and is in the (final analysis) the source of ever-increasing afflictions. It promotes discrimination, as through it I comprehend correctly the fundamental principles of this universe. I, however, have arrived at the conclusion that this body belongs to others (parents who gave birth to it—or birds and beasts of prey who may eat it).

*. They saw that the three guṇas are evolved out of Māyā. It is in the Māyā or Prakṛti that the universe is woven and Jīva gets involved in Samsāra as it is invested with Prakṛti—VJ.

1. Cf. Vāyur vai Gautama sūtram, vāyunā vai sūtreṇā'yam ca lokah, paraś ca lokah sarvāṇi ca bhūtāni sandṛbdhāni —Brhad. Up. 3.7.2

Realizing this, I roam about without entertaining any attachment to the body.

26. It is with the desire of securing pleasure and comforts for this body that a person, with great strain to himself maintains his wife, children, earns money, raises cattle, and keeps servants, houses and relatives. But in the end (at the time of death), like a tree leaving its seed behind for the growth of another tree, it perishes providing for (his re-birth in) another body.

27. The tongue drags a person in one direction to satisfy his taste with tasty eatables; thirst, to another; the organ of generation, still to another direction for sexual intercourse; the senses of touch, hearing and stomach severally to different directions; the nose (sense of smell) still to a different direction (to enjoy perfumes); his quick eyesight, to another and all his organs of action in their own respective directions. In this way, like co-wives pulling (lit. tearing up) the lord of their house (in their own direction), the senses and organs tear up a person.

28. Having created, with his inherent power, the birthless Māyā, various kinds of bodies (i.e. species) such as those of plants and trees, reptiles, mammals, birds, biting insects (like mosquitos), fish (and other aquatic animals), he remained unsatisfied. But when God created the human being with an intellectual capacity capable of realizing the Brahman or Supreme Being, He became delighted.*

29. Having secured, at the end of many transmigrations, birth in this very rare human body which, though transient, is capable of attaining the highest object in life, viz. Mokṣa (liberation), a wise person should endeavour at the earliest, to attain the summum bonum, before his body had not fallen a prey to death. For, objects of senses can, however, be enjoyed everywhere in all species.

30. In this manner, with the sense of dispassion developed and with the light of spiritual wisdom dawned in me, I wander over the earth, free from all attachments and egotism.

31. Knowledge obtained from one preceptor may not be stable, convincing and comprehensive<sup>1</sup>. This Brahman is verily one without a second, but it is sung variously by different sages.

The Lord said :

32. In this manner, the Brāhmaṇa, of deep knowledge, replied all the questions of Yadu and took his leave of Yadu. He was duly respected and prayed by the king. With pleasure, the Brāhmaṇa wended his way.

33. Having carefully listened to the philosophical exposition of the Avadhūta, Yadu, the ancestor of our ancestors, became completely free from all types of attachment and looked upon all as equals.

CHAPTER TEN

How the Jīva is Ensnared in Saṁsāra

The Lord said :

1. Alertly observant of the righteous duties (prescribed in the Pāñcarātra and other Vaiṣṇavite systems) taught by me, completely dependent on me, one should, without entertaining any desire (for the fruits of his actions), observe the course of duties prescribed for one's respective social class (varṇa), stage of life (āśrama) and family traditions<sup>2</sup>.

2. With his mind purified (by the observance of his prescribed duties—dharma), he should (always) note how all the

1. Here ŚR clarifies that Upaniṣadic sages like Śvetaketu and Bhṛgu did not have more than one spiritual preceptor. But the spiritual guidance received by them pertained to the identity of Brahman & the Ātman. Here the 'knowledge' means clarifications of minor doubts which can be resolved by logical reasoning; for this a number of 'preceptors' or 'examples' are useful.

2. EK. classifies Karma into four categories : nitya (to be performed daily), naimittika (occasional), Kāmya (performed for fulfilment of desire) and Prāyaścitta (expiatory). All these should be dedicated to the Lord. EB, 10.46-66.

endeavours of embodied beings, who, believing objects of sense pleasures to be real<sup>1</sup>, are addicted to them and are frustrated, leading them to the contrary results.

3. Just as the objects seen in the dream-state, or the hallucinations of a day-dreamer have no existence in reality and are futile (as they present both desirable and undesirable things unrelated to the main objective of human life), similarly, the notion of difference (in relation to Ātman as a celestial being, human being) caused by Guṇas is illusory or meaningless.<sup>2</sup>

4. A person who is solely devoted to me should perform disinterestedly<sup>3</sup> the obligatory (e.g. Sandhyā, pañcamahāyajñas and occasional (e.g. Śrāddha for ancestors) types of acts but should abstain from acts (to be performed for the fruits thereof)<sup>4</sup>. But a person who has entered into the investigation of the nature of the Soul or god need not respect and follow the injunctions of the Vedas, prompting the performance of (sacrificial and other) acts.

5. One who has exclusively devoted himself to me should continuously practice the five vows (such as non-violence, truth, possessionlessness) known as Yama and occasionally vows (such as penance, charity, silence) called Niyama. He should wait upon his spiritual preceptor, who is full of serenity, has realized me (as his Self) and is devoted to me.

6. Such a disciple should be free from pride, envy; he should be alert, watchful, free from attachment. He should be

1. tattva-jñānena (i) Realizing and contemplating the real nature of his soul and the Supreme Soul—VR.

(ii) Definitely ascertaining the means of attaining Puruṣārthas (objects of human life)—VJ.

2. VJ. takes a contrary view : Just as dream-visions . . . and fancies of day-dreamers are different from reality and hence fruitless, similarly the notion of one-ness or identity is baseless as it is the apprehension of the faculties of the mind, but not of the essential powers of the self.

3. VJ defines Nivṛtta Karma as that done with a correct understanding of Paramātmā and done without any desire for return :

niṣkāmaṁ jñānapūṣaṁ ca nivṛttam iti co'cyate

4. ŚR. quotes a Smṛti text as authority. It means : 'A person desirous of Liberation from saṁsāra should not turn to kāmya (promising fruits in return) and niṣiddha (prohibited) karmas but only the daily obligatory (nitya) and occasional types of acts (karmas)'.

patient, thoroughly devoted to the preceptor, keen on knowing the truth; he should not try to find fault with others and should not waste of his words unnecessarily.

7. He should be indifferent and unattached to his wife, children, house, lands, relatives, property, etc.<sup>1</sup> He should realize that all his purpose is common to all.

8. The Soul is distinct from both the subtle and the gross bodies.<sup>2</sup> He is the seer (the witness) and self-illuminating even as the fire which illumines and burns is different from the fuel that is burnt and lighted up.

9. Just as a fire which has entered into the wood and is burning it, assumes the qualities i e. states of that piece of wood such as coming into existence, going out of existence, its smallness and bigness and its varieties of forms (but is itself distinct from the fuel), so does the Ātman which is distinct from the body, assume the states of the body<sup>3</sup> (Though he has no birth, death, growth, size, forms, etc.)

10. For what is called the body is created out of the (three) guṇas of (the Māyā of) Lord Puruṣottama and the saṁsāra (the cycle of birth and deaths) is the consequence of the false identification of the Soul with the body. It is only through the real knowledge of the (distinctness between the body and the) Ātman that this misapprehension of saṁsāra is removed.<sup>4</sup>

11. This being the case, by means of deep investigation

1. ŚR. explains that as Ātmā abides in all bodies and thus all share the same purpose, viz. happiness, etc., there is no propriety of claiming them exclusively as his own. This leads to dispassion.

2. VJ. : The individual Soul and the Supreme Soul are different and distinct intense from the body and other products of non-intelligent Prakṛti.

3. VJ : This is the view of the ignorant who identify the individual Soul and the Supreme Soul.

4. EK. compares the soul involved in Samśāra to a king who dreams that he is a beggar. When in the morning, the family priest comes and wakes him up he realizes that he is a king and not a beggar as he regarded himself to be so long. The spiritual preceptor is the priest and the Jīva involved in Samśāra is the dreaming King. When instead of aham (I), he realized So'ham (I am He—Brahman) then the misapprehension of Samśāra is dispelled.

(into reality), a person should properly realize that the absolute, transcendental soul abiding in the product (viz. his body) is different from the body, and then gradually dispel the misapprehension that this phenomenal world is real.

12. The spiritual preceptor is the supporting (lower) piece of wood and the pupil is the supported (upper) piece. Instruction is the process of friction (or joining together of these pieces), and the knowledge is the fire that brings happiness<sup>1</sup>

13. This highly purified<sup>2</sup> intellect (of the capable disciple) (when sharpened by the spiritually capable teacher) drives off the Māyā which is caused by Guṇas. Burning down (i.e. dispelling) guṇas (objects of senses and senses) and the universe that is created by them, this intellect too, automatically disappears like fire, when the fuel is completely consumed.

14-16*. If you believe in the multiplicity of these agents or doers of Karmas and the enjoyers of the (consequent) pleasures and pains, and in the eternity and separateness of the world, the Time, The Śāstras and individual Souls (as the mīmāṃsakas do), if you hold that all objects have a continuity (or eternity) while they undergo constant change,

1. An echo of Tait. Upa. :

ācāryaḥ pūrva-rūpam/antevāsi uttara-rūpam/vidyā sandhiḥ/pravacanam sandhānam/

—Tait. Upa. 1.3.2.

According to VJ, this knowledge burns down the grass in the form of the notion of identity between Jīva and Brahm ..

(Jīvasya Brahma—bhāva—buddhi—tṛṇa—dahanam/)

2. Vaiśārādī—pertaining to Viṣṇu who terminates the Samsāra characterised by pleasure and pain—VJ.

* VJ : (The gist only) The distinction between all jīvas is natural, and according to their mutual difference, they are invested with different bodies and the character of their knowledge differs naturally. Jīvas of the highest order are eternal, and from the point of their body, they are said to be born; they enjoy only happiness while the second and third may experience a mixture of happiness and misery or only misery.

VR : Though the Pravṛtti Karma may be the means of achieving Puruṣārthas, all embodied beings are subjected to the six states of body (such as birth, youth, death and the consequent miseries) according to the species in which they are born, due to the influence of Time and its division.

and that the intelligence becomes changed according to the forms of different objects perceived by it, O Uddhava, even if this be the case, due to frequent (forced) associations (of the Soul) with different bodies and due to the force of the division of Time, all embodied souls are repeatedly subjected to the different states of births, deaths, etc.

17. Even here (from your argument) it becomes obvious that there is absence of free will in the case of doers of actions and there is no choice for the experiencers of pleasures and pains. What happiness can there be to one who is dependent (and at the mercy of others) ?

18*. Not an iota of real happiness exists for those embodied souls who are learned (and expert in the technique of performing Vedic Karmas; nor is misery the lot of the ignorant; Hence, the sense of pride (of knowing the correct technique of performance of Karma) is vain and futile.

19. Even though some people happen to know the means of obtaining happiness and averting miseries (and the principle of Free Will be accepted), even such knowers are ignorant of the means of counter-acting (successfully) the power of Death.

20. What achievement of object or a desire can give happiness when Death is near him ? No object can give pleasure to a victim who is being led to the place of execution.

21. The heavenly happiness promised by Vedas is also vitiated with envy, jealousy, termination and decay, as in the case of pleasure experienced on the earth. And there are many impediments and chances of failure in the accomplishment of desires as in the case of Agriculture.

22. Even if a religious act is properly performed without any impediment in its successful conclusion, listen to the nature of the celestial position attained by him.

*. VR : Experts in the technique of performance of Karmas find it very difficult to collect materials, etc. at the time of performance of the Karmas and are nervous due to the transient nature of its fruits. Or Even great gods like Brahmā do not enjoy unmixed happiness, as they are aware of the end of the tenure of their office. But fools entertain futile egotism about it.

VJ : Even the wise, being attached to their bodies, have no real happiness. What need be said of the ignorant proud persons ?

23. Having worshipped gods (like Indra, Varuṇa, etc.) by performance of sacrifices in this world, the sacrificer goes to the celestial world. He enjoys like a god heavenly pleasures that he has earned through his meritorious acts.

24. In a lustrous celestial car (provided with all luxuries) earned by his meritorious acts, he, wearing a rich, attractive dress, sports with the celestial damsels while being glorified by Gandharvas in song.

25. While sporting with the heavenly nymphs in a celestial car which is adorned with small jingling bells, and which goes according to the will of the occupant, he is so absorbed in celestial pleasures that he is not aware of his impending fall.

26. He heartily enjoys himself in the heaven so long as the fund of his merits is not exhausted. But when the balance of merits is exhausted, he is pushed down by Time and he falls down reluctantly.

27. If, due to the association with unrighteous people, a person takes delight in impiety or loses control over his senses, being passionate and libidinous, he becomes miserly, avaricious and addicted to women and heartlessly injurious to living beings.

28. He kills animals in violation of Śāstric injunctions and worships the hosts of goblins and ghosts therewith. Such a person inevitably falls into various hells and ultimately enters the hell of terrible darkness (i.e. is born as an immobile).

29. What happiness can there be to a mortal person who, in the present birth (as a human being) perpetrates deeds that result in miseries and in consequence of which acts, he has to assume another body?

30. Regions and their rulers whose span of life extends to the end of a Kalpa (432 million years) are afraid of me. Even god Brahmā whose life is of two Parārdha years fears Me.

31. Guṇas i.e. senses and organs create (i.e. are the cause of) Karmas; a guṇa (like Sattva etc.) motivates the senses to actions. This Jīva, being endowed with sense-organs, enjoys the fruits of his acts.

32. So long as the unbalanced condition of guṇas prevails, manifoldness (and difference) will be projected on Ātman (which, as a matter of fact, is one). As long as the (apparent) multiplicity in the Soul remains, the state of dependence (of the Jiva) shall persist.

33. So long as the dependent state of the Jiva continues, there will be fear from God. Hence, those who take resort to gunas become overcome with grief and delusion.

34. When there is an imbalance in the three gunas of Māyā (and there is agitation of the gunas), ignorant people call me by various names such as Time (Kāla), Soul (Ātman), scriptures (Āgama), the World (Loka), the Nature (Svabhāva) and Dharma.

Uddhava asked :

35. How is it that the Ātman, though associated with and present in the gunas of the body, is not bound by them? Or if he be independent, how does he get involved in them? (What is the correct position in the matter) O Lord.

36. By what characteristics is a bound or liberated Soul be recognised? How does he behave? With whom is he found sporting or wandering? What things does he enjoy or cast away? How does he lie or sit or go about?

37. O Acyuta! You are the foremost among those who solve problems. I am really confused. How can the same Ātman be both eternally bound and ever-free? Be pleased to explain this problem to me.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

Characteristics of Bondage and Liberation and of Devotion

The glorious Lord said:

1.* The characterisation that 'I am bound' or 'I am liberated' is determined with reference to gunas, and it has no

* ŚR : OR: The statement that 'The individual soul is bound or liberated' is made on the basis of its being subject to or free from the pre-dispositions of gunas and it does not refer to its real nature. The gunas are relation to my essential nature. But guṇas have their roots in Māyā. Hence, there is neither liberation nor bondage to me. This is my decision (with reference to this notion of bondage)

2.* Grief and infatuation, pleasure and pain, and the condition of the body (viz. birth and death and change of body) are the work of Māyā (and are not real, but are wrongly attributed to the Soul). Just as a dream is only an unreal appearance (vivarta) of the mind (or intellect), so is Samsāra illusory, unreal.

3. O Uddhava ! Please understand that knowledge and ignorance are my potencies which are in existence since the time immemorial, and both are the creations of my Māyā. These potencies bring about bondage and release in the case of embodied beings.

under my control. As I am their controller, liberation or bondage are not applicable to me.

VR and SS: (Sudarśana Sūri) emphasize that the bondage and liberation positively affect the Jīva (individual) and not the Supreme Soul or God.

VJ. The statement 'Bound' or 'Liberated' refers only to Jīva who is affected by the three guṇas of Prakṛti which is under my control. Hence the notion of bondage and liberation is not applicable to me.

SD. When the Jīva which is bound by guṇas resorts to me, he is liberated. Cf. BG.7.14.

* Both SS & VR hold that what is 'non-eternal' (anitya) is 'un-essential' (avāstava) but it is not false or unreal (mithyā). Hence grief, etc. caused by Māyā or Prakṛti under my control are related like a dream to a jīva. The dream and Samsāra both are real but not eternal conditions of the jīva, and they have an end. Hence, Samsāra is not the essential state of jīva. The main thrust of the argument is: Svapnaprapañcasyāvāstavatvaṃ nāmānityatvaṃ eva na tu mithyātvaṃ. Both SS & VR quote Bṛhad. Up. 4.310 as the authority for their stance (na tatra rathā na ratha-yogāḥ, etc.)

VJ: Grief, pleasure etc. are experienced in a dream due to ignorance that it is dream. Similarly, due to the ignorance of his own essential nature, jīva suffers in Samsāra. Samsāra is not false (mithyā) and is indestructible but it can be warded off: samsṛtiḥ satyapi na vāstavi pratihantum aśakyā—svapna-dṛṣṭāntena samsārasya na mithyātvaṃ ucyate. This quotation is used by SD & BP.

VC. It is due to the condition (upādhi) of avidyā that the jīva accepts and authorises to himself (and experiences) sorrow, delusion etc. in the subtle body. They are not a part of jīva's essential nature. They are caused by avidyā and hence, mithyā (samsṛtir na vāstavi. . Śokamohādināṃ māyā-sṛṣṭatvena satyatve'pi. . jīve avidyākalpitatoḥ mithyātvaṃ).

4.* O highly intelligent Uddhava ! Though I, as ātman, am one, it is in relation to Jīva (who is my reflection and as such Aṁśa—a particle—of mine) that the eternal bondage exists due to Avidyā (ignorance), and the other state i. e. emancipation from Samsāra comes to take place through vidyā (knowledge).

5.** I shall now explain to you the distinction between one in bondage (namely the individual Soul or Jīva) and the other who stands altogether emancipated (viz. Ātman). They are characterized by two opposite sets of qualities though both are seen abiding in one and the same individual.

6.*** These are two fine-winged birds (viz. the Jīva and Śiva the Indwelling Self both of whom are distinct from the body<sup>1</sup>. They are (inseparable) companions and kindred in (their being spiritual in) nature. Through Divine will (Māyā), they share the same abode on the tree<sup>2</sup> (viz. the body, their habitat). One of them (the Jīva) eats the fruit of the * VR. states that though bondage exists from eternity it is terminable by spiritual knowledge. VJ. holds that the jīva and paramātman are two distinct entities. The Jīva is subject to bondage and liberation and is under the control of paramātman.

** VR & VJ. believe that both jīva who is subject to bondage, and Paramātman who is independent, omniscient abide in the same body, though the latter is not subject to bondage.

*** According to VR. the two wings of Jīva are righteous and un-righteous acts (dharmādharmau) while that of the other bird, Paramātman, are absolute defect-less-ness and absolute excellences. The 'nest' of the Jīva and Paramātman is in the heart of the tree (the body). The pippal-fruits are the objects of senses such as sound, form, etc.

VJ. quotes his authorities and asserts that the other bird—the Lord—enjoys happiness only but never experiences what is bad or evil.

EK. explains that jīva is called a bird as it flies from tree to tree (occupies one body or birth after another). The existence of the other bird and the terms sadṛśau and sakhāyau refute atheism and establish the existence of God.

EB. 11.159-184.

1.Cf. dvā suparṇā sayujā sakhāyā
śamānam vṛkṣam pariśasvajāte/ tayor ekaḥ pippalam svādvatti anaśnan anyo' bhicākaśīti //

—Munḍaka 3.1.1-Śvetāśva 4.6

2. Cf. Kaṭha 6.1 & BG. 15.1.

Pippala tree (i.e. experiences pleasure or pain as the fruit of the previous karmas to be enjoyed while in the body. The other (viz. Śiva or Īśvara) does not partake anything of it, (i. e. is above pleasure and pain, karmas, etc.), yet is more powerful (in spiritual wisdom).

7. (Out of the two) the bird who does not eat the fruit of the Pippala tree (i.e. does not enjoy the fruits of karmas) knows himself as well as the other. But not so the eater of the Pippala fruits (Jīva, the enjoyer of the fruits of his karma). He is entangled in Nescience and has been in bondage since eternity; while the other (Śiva or God) being full of (spiritual) knowledge, is eternally free.

8. Even though a Jīva, endowed with correct knowledge (i.e. a liberated Soul) happens to abide in a body (due to his past karmas), is not conditioned by (and attached to his) body like a person who is awakened from his dream, remains unattached to his body in the dream. On the contrary, a person with the wrong notion of his being identical with his body, when as a matter of fact, he is not conditioned by it, becomes to confined to it like a dreaming person who feels bound within the dream-body, when really he is un-connected with it.<sup>1</sup>

9. A person possessing spiritual wisdom should remain unaffected (by love, hate etc.) without feeling that he is involved in the act, when the objects of senses which are the products of guṇas (like form, taste, smell) are apprehended by senses which are also modifications of guṇas.<sup>2</sup>

10.* An ignorant Jīva, abiding in this body which is under the control of his Fate or past acts, regards himself to be the doer of an act, which is actually being done by his sense-organs which are the products of guṇas, and remains confined in it (due to his) (false) notion of being the agent of that act).

1. GD.: The verse states the differentia between a bound (baddha) and a liberated Soul.

11-12. Understanding this, a man of spiritual wisdom (engaged in activities like) lying in bed, occupying a seat, taking a walk or performing ablutions and in (the activities of the cognitive and conative sense-organs such as) sight, touch, smell eating food, hearing, etc, does not get bound like an ignorant person. He allows his senses to enjoy their objects. Though he abides in the physical body (which being a modification of Prakṛti is) called Prakṛti, he is not contaminated by it like the sky (which pervades everything but is not contaminated by anything), the Sun (which, though reflected in the water or mirror is untouched by the reflecting media), or the air (which as the vital air-prāṇa moves through all parts of the body and still is unconcerned with it, and which as a wind, moves in any direction without being fixed or attached anywhere)<sup>1</sup>

13. All the (varieties of) doubts of such persons are cut asunder with the sword of his clear, penetrating insight sharpened by his total renunciation. He discards the sense of diversity like a person, awakened (to reality) from a dream state, does about (scenes in) dreams.

14. Even though a Jīva is abiding in the body, if the functions of his life (breathing), senses, mind and intellect are free from purposeful thought or motivation, he is never fettered by the attributes - the guṇas - of the body (involving pleasure and pain).<sup>2</sup>

15. He is a spiritually wise (and liberated) person who remains unaffected even when his body is troubled by cruel

1. ŚR.: Verses 11 to 13 explain Uddhava's question about the way of behaviour of a true Bhāgavata. But ŚR's explanation is on a lower plane on verse 12.

EK. says that these verses treat the behaviour of the absolutely liberated person. EK. draws a highly idealistic picture in which he poetically describes in details (from ovis 263 to 393) how in every action, a liberated soul, being ever absorbed in the bliss of Brahman, is a part of his spiritual life, where the triad of act-action-actor is non-existent. In all these acts, even his sexual intercourse is shown in its spiritual light.

No annotator of the Bh. P. has risen to the staggering spiritual height of EK. in his com. on these three verses.

2. This verse explains Uddhava's question 'how a liberated person behaves.'

beast or wicked persons or is by chance respectfully worshipped with due attentions somewhere by some persons.<sup>1</sup>

16. Being devoid of attributes good or bad (or being above the sense of good or evil), a sage looks upon all with an equal eye. He does not praise him who does a good turn to him; nor does he blame him who does or says something evil about him.

17. A sage should not do, speak or contemplate good or evil (about anyone or anything). (Detached from the worldly way of life) a sage should revel in (the bliss of) his own Self. Assuming such a way of life, he should move about like a dull person.

18. A person who has plunged deeply in the verbal revelation of the Brahman (i. e. is well-versed in the interpretation of the Vedas or Vedic philology), but is not so in the realization of the Supreme Brahman (by engaging himself in meditation, etc. prescribed for it), gets labour (on the Vedic studies) as the fruit (of his verbal knowledge of the Veda and not the realization of the Supreme Brahman), like a man who keeps a cow which has ceased to be a cow (and is incapable of yielding milk).

19. Dear Uddhava ! A person who maintains a cow that has been milked to (the period of) dryness (and no longer yields any milk), a faithless wife<sup>2</sup>, a body under the control of another person (for support), wayward children, wealth not utilised on the worthy (cause or recipients) and speech not glorifying me or my name, is visited by misery after misery.

20. A wise man should not cultivate barren (i. e. wasteful) speech which does not contain glorification of my hallowing acts of the creation, maintenance and destruction of this universe or the sportive incarnations taken (by me) at the prayer of the world (or popular incarnations like Rāma, kṛṣṇa, etc.).

1. Verses 15-17 reply Uddhava's query "What are the characteristics of a liberated person?"

ŚR.: quotes Tājñavalkya: A sage is not angry against a person who pricks him with a thorn nor is pleased with one who anoints him with sandal. He treats both of them equally.

2. ŚR. interprets asatī as Kāmasūnyā—a frigid or an old wife. EK adds quarrelsomeness and insubordination to lack of character in explaining asatī.

21. Having thus removed by dint of critical investigation (on the lines described in the above verses), the wrong notion<sup>1</sup> of seeing diversity with reference to Ātman, and having resigned (with full concentration) one's thoroughly purified mind to me who am the all-pervading Lord, he should completely withdraw himself from all activities.<sup>2</sup> (Mere scholarship in religious works is not enough.)

22. If you are not able to concentrate the mind firmly in the Brahman, carry out your duties resigning all acts to me, without expecting any fruit in return (from them).

23-24. Listening with faith and devotion<sup>3</sup> extremely auspicious stories about me which purify the world, singing them (to others as in a kirtana) and contemplating on them and enacting my Avatāra and deeds performed by me (during the kirtana<sup>4</sup>) and observing faithfully the duties pertaining to the three puruṣārthas (viz. dharma-righteousness, artha—wealth and kāma—enjoyment of pleasures) with a view to please me<sup>5</sup> and entirely depending on me, one develops unswerving devotion in me who am Eternal, O Uddhava.

25. It is through devotion developed in association with saintly persons that he becomes my real votary. Verily such a

1. VJ. enumerates the following wrong notions according to the Dvaita school: (1) Identity between the Jiva and Lord, (2) The one-ness of soul—all jivas make one existence, (3) The gross world is not real.

2. VR: One should abstain from Pravṛtti mārga which leads the jiva from one life to another.

3. EK. details here how to avoid the four types of obstructions while listening to and contemplating about the name and deeds of the Lord. He describes the three types of devotional love (viz. Sāttvika, Rājasa and Tāmasa) generated in the audience. He however, emphasizes the importance of the fourth type which transcends these three and makes the listener forget himself completely—absorbed in the meditation of the Lord like 'a crystal of salt fallen into the sea'.

—EB. 11.706-25.

4. EK. describes how to represent these by giving examples of lifting of Govardhana, etc. ibid. 735-37.

5. EK. To real devotees the Lord is their dharma, artha and kāma. He automatically—without conscious or deliberate intention—resigns all his acts to the Lord. The real votary is endowed with spiritual wisdom and all his acts are per se dedicated to the Lord. This real Bhāgavata devotion is called saṁviti in Vedānta and Śakti in Śaivism.

devotee easily attains to my exalted state (or Vaikuṇṭha) as pointed out by the righteous.

Uddhava submitted:

26. O Lord of hallowing glory ! What kind of person is regarded as a saint (Sādhu) by you? (What are his characteristics?) What type of devotion is respectfully appreciated by pious devotees (like Nārada) and would be useful to attain to you?

27. O Ruler of gods like Brahmā ! The Controller of the world ! Be pleased to explain this to me who have prostrated myself before you and am full of loving devotion to you and have sought your shelter, O Lord of the world.

28. You are the Supreme Reality (The Brahman) untainted and unattached like the highest sky, transcendental to Prakṛti.<sup>1</sup> It is at your own free will<sup>2</sup> that you have assumed a distinct finite personality and have descended (on the earth).

The Lord replied:

29. Such a sage is compassionate; he never envies or harms any creature; is full of fortitude; firm and strong in truthfulness; of pure mind (untainted by jealousy, etc.) ; equi-poised in pleasure and pain (unaffected by joy and sorrow under the above conditions); obliging unto all.

30. His mind is never perturbed by desires; his senses are fully under control; he is gentle-hearted; of pure (perfectly moral) conduct; devoid of all possessions; free from desires (or evil activities), moderate in eating and drinking; serene in mind; firm in his own dharma, seeking asylum in me and contemplative by nature.

1. This shows that the Lord is distinct from the non-sentient Prakṛti and sentient jīva—VR.

2. Who has assumed a finite form due to intense desire of His devotees—ŚR. EK. elaborates this. But to attribute 'Will' or the pressure of the wishes and the prayers on the Supreme Brahman is rather strange, if the pure Upaniṣadic concept of Brahman is accepted. In works on Bhakti (as in the present case), however, God is humanised (Translator.)

31. He is ever alert and vigilant; of deep mind (remaining undisturbed under exciting circumstances); full of grit (in the face of danger); free from six worries<sup>1</sup> or bodily defects (viz. hunger and thirst, grief and infatuation, old age and death); Though himself indifferent to worldly honour, pays respect (to the worthy); possesses aptitude and willingness to impart knowledge; a sincere friend; merciful in behaviour and endowed with spiritual knowledge.

32. He is the best of saints who (finding them to be distractions and obstructions in meditating on me or concluding definitely that everything will be obtained through devotion to me or becoming ineligible to perform karmas due to his unflinching firm devotion) neglects his duties though they are prescribed by me (in the Veda) and even though he knows full well the merits accruing from performing those duties and the evil consequences of disobeying them; and (thus in preference to his prescribed duties) is engaged in my worship.

33. Realizing me or (if unrealized) contemplating on me as unlimited by time and space, as the Inner Soul abiding in all and essentially characterized by 'Is'-ness, (existence) knowledge and bliss those who worship me exclusively, are definitely regarded by me as the best of devotees.

34.* To behold, to touch, to embrace and to worship my idols or other representations (like Śāligrāma and others) and my devotees, render personal service to them, to eulogise me, to extol and chant my deeds and excellences with utmost humbleness;

35. To listen to my stories with deep faith and devotion, to meditate upon me constantly, to offer to me all that one acquires, to dedicate oneself to me entirely for my service, O Uddhava;

36. To recite (and describe) my incarnations and deeds, to participate joyously in my festivities (like Janmāṣṭamī—the birth anniversary of Lord Kṛṣṇa), to celebrate my festivals

1. ŚR. quotes the following defects about which people worry: Kṣut-pipāsa, śoka-mohau, jarā-mṛtyū śaḍ-ūrmayah/

in my temple with musical entertainments such as vocal and instrumental music and dancing and purāṇa recitation and discussion.

37. To go in procession for pilgrimage (to places sacred to me) on all annual festivals<sup>1</sup> and to offer me flowers, sandal paste and (vegetarian) food, to get initiated in the Vedic and Tāntric way of worshipping me and to observe vows sacred to me (like observance of fast on the Ekādaśī day).

38. Devout enthusiasm in installing my image (in temples), individual and cooperative endeavour to lay out flower-gardens, orchards, playgrounds, and construction of temples and towns:

39. To render service in my house (temple) like a sincere servant by sweeping and washing, plastering with cowdung the floor and decorating it with ornamental drawings figures without expecting anything in return for this service;

40. One should be free from pride (about the service rendered to God) and should be free from hypocrisy. One should not even mention what good one has done. One should not use for one's private purpose anything that is offered to me, including the light of the lamp.<sup>2</sup>

41. Whatever is desired most to oneself in the world or whatever is dearest to one's heart should be dedicated to me. Such offering results in infinite and everlasting good.

42. O blessed Uddhava! The Sun, Fire, the Brāhmaṇa, the cows, devotees of Viṣṇu, the sky, the air, water, earth, one's own heart and all the creatures are 'the places' (objects as media) of my worship (through which worship should be offered to me).

1. Thousands of people in Maharashtra go in group-processions to Pandharpur on the ekādaśī (the 11th day in the bright half) of Āṣāḍha and Kārttika, and hundreds of them on other ekādaśī days.

2. ŚR. clarifies that this restriction is limited to the movable and immovable things (such as dress, pots, ornaments, etc.) presented to the Lord and not to eatables, flowers so offered. On the contrary, he insists that some portion of the eatables should be accepted as prasāda. He quotes a Smṛti which states that other gods and our ancestors should be offered a remnant of the food, etc. offered to Viṣṇu.

*Viṣṇor niveditānnena yaśṭavyaṁ devatāntaram/
pitṛbhyaś caiva tad deyaṁ tadānantyāya kalpate/*

43. A person should worship me in the Sun by praising the Sun with hymns from the three Vedas, in the (sacrificial) Fire, with offering oblations to it, in prominent (deserving) Brāhmaṇas, with warm hospitality and in cows with offering of grass, etc.

44. (One should worship me) in the votary of Viṣṇu with the fraternal affection,<sup>1</sup> in the heart and the sky, through deep undisturbed contemplation, in the air, with the knowledge that I am the chief vital power (mokhya-prāṇa); in water with water mixed with flowers sesamum seed, rice, etc.).

45. (A man should worship me) in the earth (levelled, squared and consecrated for sacrifice<sup>2</sup>) with the mystic syllable of Mantras, in one's own body with all the comforts (permitted by śāstras) and one should worship me in all the creatures as their In-dwelling Soul, by looking upon all beings as equals (impartially without any love or hatred towards anyone.)

46. In these 'places' of worship, one should contemplate with concentrated mind, my form with four arms wielding in each the conch, (Pāñcajanya), the discus (Sudarśana) the mace (Kaumodaki) and a lotus (respectively) and with a serene and gracious countenance.

47. He who, with a concentrated mind, worships me in this way, by performing sacrifices and by constructing tanks and other amenities to the public, develops pious devotion unto me and my constant remembrance will be awakened through service unto saints.

48. Generally, there is no other expedient (to God-realization) except the path of devotion generated in association with saintly people, for I am the chief support and refuge of the pious saints.

1. EK.: No caste-distinction should be considered about the devotees of Viṣṇu. Devotion and not caste is the criterion here. EB. 11. 1395-1408.

2. EK. says that the raised plot of earth should be like a cow and Śeṣa or Ananta, the supporter of the earth is to be worshipped. EB. 11. 1429-33.

49. Now, after this, listen to the top-most secret which deserves to be closely guarded<sup>1</sup> which, however, I am divulging to you as you are my servant (devotee), well-wisher and a friend, O scion of the Yadu race.

CHAPTER TWELVE

Importance of Association with Saints:

The Performance and Renunciation of Prescribed Karmas.

The Lord said:

1-2. Neither the path of Yoga (consisting of eight stages like postures—āsanas, breath-control—prāṇāyāma, etc.), nor the philosophy of Sāṅkhya (or the knowledge of twentyfour categories and the realization of Puruṣa being different from Prakṛti), nor the path of Dharma (consisting of non-violence, truth etc.), nor the recitation and study of the Vedas, nor penance (like the observances of vows like Kṛchra, (Cāndrāyana), nor adoption of Sannyāsa (or renunciation) nor performance of sacrifices nor constructions of works of public amenities (like digging of wells, laying out gardens, construction of free lodging houses—dharma-śālās, etc.) nor religious gifts and donations, nor self-denying vows (such as fasting on the Ekādaśī day), nor yajña i.e. worship of gods), nor the internal repetition of mystic mantras nor ablutions in sacred waters nor the observance of rules of bodily and mental purity and discipline (Niyama) nor the vows of self-control<sup>2</sup> capture me in the heart of the devotee as does the association with saints which exterminates all attachments.

1. Out of the paths of knowledge and devotion, the path of devotion is superior and association with saints helps to accomplish this. The paths of knowledge and Yoga may or may not lead to liberation from samsāra as they are dependent. Association with saints is self-dependent and efficacious to enable one to cross the samsāra with certainty—ŚR.

2. EK.: Twelve vows of Yama and Niyama each.

3-6 It is through their association with saints that a number of demons (Daityas or Diti's sons), evil spirits (Yātu-dhānas), beasts, birds, Gandharvas (celestial musicians), Apsaras (celestial dancing girls), serpents, Siddhas, semidivine beings like Cāraṇas, Yakṣas and Vidyādhara, out of human beings persons of Vaiśya and Śūdra communities (merchants, peasants, cowherds and labourers), women and outcastes and other beings* dominated by Rājasika and Tāmasa nature, have attained to my region (Vaikuṇṭha) in various yugas, O sinless Uddhava.

Many (daityas and asuras like Vṛtra, the son of Tvaṣṭṛ, Prahlāda, the son of Kayādhū, Vṛṣaparva, Bali, Bāṇa, Maya and Bibhīṣaṇa; subhuman beings like) Sugrīva, Hanumān, Jāmbavān, the bear and the elephant-king (of the well-known legend Gajendra-mokṣa); (birds like) Jaṭāyu (who gave his life for rescuing Sītā from Rāvaṇa);<sup>1</sup> Vaiśyas like Tulādhāra<sup>2</sup> and outcasts like the hunter Dharma-vyādhā<sup>3</sup>; women like the hunch-backed Trivakrā, Gopīs of Vraja and the wives of Brāhmaṇa-sacrificers (described in the Skandha) and many others have attained to my place.

7. Those (above-mentioned) persons had not studied the Vedas; nor did they serve and sit at the feet of great scholars (for Vedic studies); they did not observe vow or perform austere penance.<sup>4</sup> But they attained to me, thanks to the association with pious saints.<sup>5</sup>

*. To this list EK. adds Guhaka and Jarā Vyādhā who pierced Kṛṣṇa with an arrow.

GS. clarifies who was the saint associated with each of the individuals mentioned here: Thus the pairs of the demon and the associating saints were Prahlāda and Nārada; Bali and Prahlāda; Bāṇa and god Mahādeva; Bibhīṣaṇa and Hanumān.

1. Vide Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa (Aranyakāṇḍa sargas 14, 50, 51, 67, 68).

2. A vaiśya of Kāśī. He imparted spiritual knowledge to sage jājālī— (MBH. Śānti, chs. 261 and 262.)

3. Vyādhā from Mithilā. He preached dharma to Kauśika, a Brahmin (MBH. Vana, chs. 207-216).

4. All these ways do not lead to Mokṣa and are inferior to sat-saṅga (association with saints).

5. VJ.* states that Godhead is attained by them not without means—the means being satsaṅga.

8-9. It is only through the force of intensely loving devotion<sup>1</sup> (to me), that Gopīs, cows, trees, beasts and other dull-witted persons, serpents like Kāliya (of Vṛndāvana) became accomplished of their purpose and easily attained to me who am inaccessible to those who endeavour to realize me through Yoga, Sāṅkhya, liberal donations, observance of vows, austerities, performance of sacrifices, expounding of the sacred books, study of the Vedas and turning into a recluse sannyāsin).

10. When I was taken away along with Balarāma to Mathurā, by Akrūra, the son of śvaphalka, the Gopīs whose hearts were deeply attached to me through intense devotion, felt excruciating pangs of separation from me, as they had none else (in view) who could give them spiritual bliss.<sup>2</sup>

11. Those various nights which they passed like half a second (lit. half the winking time of the eye-lids) while I was available for company (in Rāsa dance and various other sports) at Vṛndāvana, were, after separation from me, felt by them as long as a kalpa (432 million years of mortals).

12. Just as sages lost in meditation are not conscious of (their bodies and the world consisting of) names and forms, or even as rivers after entering into the sea (lose their identity of name and form and become one with the sea), the Gopīs

1. With VR. God should be the object of intense passion—be it love or hatred and it leads to mokṣa (bhāvo'tra kāma-bhaya-dveṣādi-rūpā'bhiprāyu-viśeṣa-parah...tasya kaivalyam nāma paratvam utkṣṣatvam iti yāvat).

But VJ refutes it. According to VJ.. Devotion is the highest form of love. The word Kevalena excludes hate or other feelings and other courses for attaining to God. Kevalena viśeṣaṇāt na dveṣa-yuktā bhaktir mukti-sādhana —VJ.. Even before realisation by Śāstric knowledge the dullwitted were devotees.

2. EK. in commenting on verses 10-13 loses himself in poetic ecstasy in describing the spiritual love of Gopīs and Lord Kṛṣṇa's response to them. In the beautiful description of Rāsalīlā and other sports, there is nothing earthy—on a lower sexual plane. Though, the Gopīs were ignorant they felt the force of Lord Kṛṣṇa's supreme nature and the Love divine. Their intense devotion and pure love were beyond the capacity of a man to requite and elevate them to their blessed state. There was nothing sexy about the Gopīs. As EK. puts it, their desire for Kṛṣṇa wiped out all sexual desire from them (12.153-157). The whole passage (EB. 12.124-214) deserves to be read from the original.

whose hearts fastened with exclusive love and devotion to me, became totally unconscious of this (i. e. their own person, their close relatives like husbands and sons and this world as well as that (which was at a distance i.e. even the next world)).

13. Ignorant of my essential supreme nature, the Gopa women were enamoured of me whom they regarded not only their lover but a paramour.<sup>1</sup> Hundreds and thousands of such women in this way attained to the Supreme Brahman by contact with me. (It is through contact with the good that Gopīs came to know me to be the Supreme Person and attained Mokṣa).

14-15. Hence, O Uddhava, (transcending everything) ignore Vedic injunctions and prohibitions, renounce both Pravṛtti and Nivṛtti types of karmas, and give up what is learnt and what is to be learnt. With exclusive devotion to me seek shelter in me only who am the Soul of all embodied beings. Protected by me, you will have no fear from any quarter i.e. you will attain Mokṣa)

16. Even though I have been attentively listening to your speech, O Lord of experts in yoga, the doubt in my mind is not resolved and my mind is puzzled.

1. VJ. explains 'jāra' as one who wears out (erases) saṁsāra.

EK. explains that Kṛṣṇa did not go to any Gopī's house but as soon as a Gopī felt passion for Kṛṣṇa, he immediately satisfied it (mentally?). Just as when a piece of stone touches the Vairāḡara, the stone is instantly transformed into a diamond, the (mental) contact with Kṛṣṇa transformed Gopīs into Bhaktas and all were absorbed in Brahman. Association with the good is so efficacious.

—EB. 12. 191-214.

2. Uddhava's doubt is natural. Kṛṣṇa started with the advice of doing the Karmas prescribed by him in the Vedas and Pañcarātra Āgama. Now he asks to renounce all Karmas, Vedic injunctions and interdictions. The first doubt is whether the soul is the agent of an act; and secondly whether prescribed karmas should be performed or renounced—ŚR.

*17. This is that perceptible Supreme Lord who infuses life in all and who manifests himself within the nerve-centres or plexuses (cakras) known as Mūlādhāra and others (existing in the internal parts of the human body). With the prāṇa impregnated with nāda (called parā speech), he enters the 'cave' (known as ādhāra cakra, located near the anus). He proceeds (ahead) assuming the subtle mental form (known as paśyanti, and Madhyamā forms of speech in the spiritual plexuses called Maṇipūra and Viśuddhi located at the navel<sup>1</sup> and at the throat<sup>2</sup> respectively. He reveals Himself in the mouth in the form of short and long notes, accents (such as udātta, anudātta and svarita) and articulate sounds (like the velars, palatals, dentals, etc.). This is the grossest speech-form (called Vaikhari) of the Vedas and its branches.<sup>3</sup>

**18. Just as fire which exists in the subtle unmanifest form as heat in the atmosphere (the sky), when churned with force and helped by the wind manifests itself as a spark (which

*. EK. was an expert yogī. He took this opportunity to explain the five main and five subsidiary varieties of prāṇa (the vital air), their places and functions. He further explains the details of the six cakras, the 'unbeaten'—everexisting sound, the development of speech from the subtle (parā) stage to its gross (Vaikhari) stage. He goes out of way and explains the progress of the Yogī from the Ājñā cakra to the sahasrāra—the final stage in Yoga. (EB. 12.311-352). He adopts reflection theory (bimba-pratibimbavāda) and assumption of the body by the Soul is called 'entry into the cave' (293)

1. *tad ūrdhva nābhi-deśe tu Maṇipūram mahāprabham /
maṇivad bhinnam tat padmam Maṇipūram tathocyate//*

A Tantra-work quoted in SKD (Śabda-Kalpa-druma vol.III P.576)

2. SKD Vol.IV p.436. It is the source of all the 16 vowels. Both the Tantra work and Tantra-sāra are quoted here.

3. SR. quotes catvāri vāk parimitā padāni etc. from RV.1. 164.45 (also AV. 9.10.27) which states that the first three forms of speech being hidden in the cave are not known to men. It is the 4th form—Vaikhari—whereby they communicate. In explanation of the above Śruti, SR. quotes a verse from a hymn to the Sun (Sūrya-Stuti) from Sāmba pañcāśikā. Both of them are quoted by GS. VD and others.

** VR.: The function of the organ of speech is under my control (vāgindriya-vyāpārasya . . ātmāyattatām cāha) VJ. Vedic speech is the medium of my manifestation (viśeṣeṇa Vedādikam mama vyakti-sthānam/) is the middle form). When it is obliterated by offerings of ghee (and other sacrificial objects) it flares up ablaze (in gross form), similarly, I (who am unmanifest) manifest myself in the form of (Vedic) speech.

19. (Just as the articulate speech is my manifestation) manual activity, locomotion, evacuation of the bowels, urination, functions of the cognitive and conative organs (such as perception of smell, taste, sight, touch and audition), the determination in mind, cognition or discriminative knowledge identification of body and the Soul (the ego), Sūtra (or Pradhāna), the modifications of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas<sup>1</sup> (the whole of the universe)—all are my manifestation.

*20. This life-giving Principle—Īśvara designated as jīva—was certainly manifest, eternal and one without a second (in the beginning). He is the shelter of the three guṇas—sattva, rajas and tamas (or he assumed three guṇas). He is the source (creator) of the lotus in the form of the universe. In course of time, due to the development of the powers of speech and other organs (by embracing Māyā) he appears as many just as a seed sown in fertile soil sprouts forth in different shapes (like the different-shaped parts of the tree grown out of that seed).

1. VJ. interprets some terms differently. Thus Sankalpa=the mind, Vijñāna=Intellect (buddhi), Abhimāna=a particular working of the mind, Sūtra—Vāyu, modifications like Sattva-tamas=the egg of the universe and other things.

*. VR.: This (jīva) is certainly atomic, essentially unchangeable, eternal and one by nature. He is dependent on three guṇas (guṇa-traya vaśyaḥ) and is subjected to birth in the universe which is the product of water. In the course of time, his power is depleted due to the notion of ego, identification of the body with the soul etc. and appears many in the form of a god or a human being, etc., just as seeds sown in soils (of different constituents) appear different according to the components of the soil.

VJ.: Next to me and Lakṣmī, Brahmā who was born out of lotus, was the first Jīva or the possessor of three attributes—knowledge, bliss and power. He is subtle, the first-born. He created the principles from Ego (ahamkāra) to Pṛthivī (the earth) and entered into them without diminishing his powers. To the knowers of the Truth, he appears in many forms to control his creation just as rice and other needs grow forth in many sprouts.

21. Just as a piece of cloth exists in the expanse of the threads (of which it is woven), it is in this (Ātman or God) in whom the entire universe is woven warp and woof (i. e. God pervades the universe internally and externally. But just as Threads can exist in the absence of cloth—for example before weaving,—God can pre-exist and post-exist the universe, but the universe cannot exist independent of God). This tree of samsāra is so old that it has no beginning. It has an inherent tendency to karmas (actions). It puts forth flowers and fruits in the form of enjoyment and liberation from samsāra. (Understanding this nature of samsāra, one should give up karmas or activities with attachment).

*22. This tree (of samsāra) has two seeds—merit (punya) and sin (pāpa), hundred (s) of roots (viz. innumerable cravings). The three guṇas (sattva, rajas and tamas) are its three stalks. The five elements (mahābhūtas) are its main branches, which exude five kinds of juice (sap, viz. sound, taste, touch and such other five objects of enjoyment of the five cognitive senses). It has eleven subsidiary branches in the form of five cognitive and five conative sense-organs and the internal organ (viz., the mind). Two fine-winged birds (viz. the tri-doṣas or humours of the body such as wind, bile and phlegm). It bears two fruits, viz. pleasure and pain. It extends right upto the solar region (The Yogis who make their way through the sphere of the Sun transcend samsāra).

23. (Persons attached to samsāra are the avaracious) vultures which frequent the villages and being greedy eat but one fruit (viz. misery—Even the merit leading to the heaven results in misery and hence is of the nature of misery. The other birds (recluses who have renounced samsāra are full of discrimination and stay away in forests. They are the swans—(Haṁsas—a higher order among recluses) who eat of the other fruit (of eternal bliss. He who realizes through the service and grace of spiritual preceptors that it is the One Supreme Soul who appears in multifarious forms through his Māyā power (out of his desire to be many), has really understood the (essence of the) Vedas.

*. VJ. attributes different significance to different numbers in this verse: Thus the two seeds of the universe are Brahmā and Sarasvatī. Rudra Indra and Candra, the presiding deities over the Ego, Intellect and the Mind are the three stalks. The birds are two classes of people—the followers of Pravṛtti and Nivṛtti, the three barks are the three guṇas. The two fruits are the karmas leading to samsāra and those leading to Mokṣa (Liberation).

24. In this way by propitiating and serving the spiritual preceptor and through exclusive devotion unto me, and with the keen-edged axe of spiritual knowledge, cut asunder the subtle body environing the jīva (which causes rebirth). Remaining perfectly vigilant, a (spiritually) wise person should attain to Ātman. It is after this (attainment to Ātman) that you should abandon even the weapon called Vidyā (with which you cut off the subtle body of the jīva).

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

The Spiritual Knowledge Imparted by the Divine Swan

The Lord said :

1. Sattva, Rajas and Tamas are the attributes of the Intellect (Buddhi called here as Prakṛti) and not of the Self. Therefore by (re-inforcing the attribute) Sattva, one should overcome (the tendencies of) the other two (viz. Rajas and Tamas) and then by developing Sattva (in the form of perfect tranquility) one should subdue Sattva (characterised by virtues like truthfulness, etc.)

2. When Sattva becomes dominant, it develops in Man dharma which is characterised by devotion to me. Sattva develops by use of Sāttvika things and then leads to dharma which is of the nature of Devotion to God.

3. Righteousness characterised by devotion to me is the best form of virtue. It enhances the potency of Sattva which eliminates Rajas and Tamas. When these two are weeded out, unrighteousness which has its roots in these two is automatically exterminated.

4*. Scriptures, water, progeny, sacred places, time, acts, birth, meditation, mantras and purificatory rites—these ten factors are the determinants in promoting a guṇa.

5. (Out of these) whatever is approved of as Sāttvika by persons expert in Śāstras and of mature judgement is (reliably) Sāttvika; (the acts, etc.) that they censure is Tāmasa and that about which they are indifferent is Rājasa.

6. For the purpose of development of Sattva guṇa, one should use Sāttvika things.<sup>1</sup> Sattva guṇa leads to righteousness from which spiritual wisdom arises and it (goes on developing till it) results in the attainment of Self realization which eliminates ignorance and guṇas whereby the gross and subtle bodies come into being.<sup>2</sup>

7. Just as forest-conflagration caused by the friction of bamboos gets extinguished after completely burning down the bamboo forest, in the same manner this body which is the pro-

* BP. enumerates these on the basis of ŚR's explanation of the 6th verse but has given it a sectarian Vaiṣṇavite turn to the list as follows:

(1) Scriptures e.g. Vedas and Āgamas like Pāñcarātra, (2) Sacred waters like those of holy rivers like the Gaṅgā, (3) Prajā—saintly people (4) Lonely place (proper for meditation), (5) Time—like Brāhma Muhūrta (roughly 4 a.m. to 6 a.m.); (6) acts done without any attachment or expectation in return; (7) birth-life after the thread ceremony or the initiation for a sacrifice (8) Meditation on Viṣṇu; (9) Mantra (sacred formula about Viṣṇu such as Om namo bhagavate Vāsudevāya); (10) rites—Vaiṣṇavite ones such as branding god's names on one's person, wearing Vaiṣṇavite mark of sandal, etc. on the forehead.

1. ŚR. enumerates them as follows: (1) Scriptures leading to renunciation of Samsāra, and not heretic texts or those of the path of Pravṛtti (Karma-mārga); (2) Sacred waters and not scented water or wine; (3) Recluses or saints who have renounced their household and samsāra; (4) Brāhma-muhūrta for meditation; (5) Daily religious duties not acts with a desire (for heaven) or black magic; (6) Birth i.e. initiation into the Vaiṣṇava or Śaiva path but not those of Śāktas, (7) meditation of god Viṣṇu; (8) Mantra like OM (9) Purificatory rites pertaining to one's mind.

2. To the argument that knowledge arises by listening to the 'great sentence' (that art thou) and hence the development of Sattva or Dharma are superfluous; ŚR. explains that spiritual Knowledge increases to that duct of the unequal forces of guṇas ceases to be by the mutual friction and destruction of the guṇas.

Uddhava said :

8. How is it that people indulge into enjoyment of sense-objects like a dog or a mule or a goat, even though most of the mortals generally know that enjoyment of such objects is the source of calamities.

The Lord replied :

9. The perverted notion<sup>1</sup> of I-ness (identifying the body with the soul) springs up in the heart of a deluded person with such a force that the terrible rajas takes (complete) possession of the mind though (originally) it (the mind) is born of Sattva.

10. In the mind of a person bedevilled by the Rajas, arises first the notion of enjoyability of an object and then the special enjoyable features (and thoughts about the ways and means of attaining them) are thoroughly rooted in it. Ultimately owing to constant thinking on the excellent aspects of the objects, an irresistible passion for them is engendered in the mind of men of such perverted notion.

11. Being completely diluted (and swept off) by the vehemence of the Rajas, he loses his control over his senses and organs and being at the mercy of his carnal desires, rushes into acts even though he clearly foresees their painful consequences.

12. Although a man of knowledge and wisdom may get his intellect distracted and overpowered by Rajas and Tamas, he should assiduously and with alertness control his mind and realizing the evil consequences (of the enjoyment of such objects) should not be attached to them.

13. Having achieved steadiness or bodily posture and control over the breath, one should, at the proper fixed time, gradually concentrate his mind on Me with vigilance and without feeling despondent (in case of distractions).

much extent to which one realises the one-ness of Jīva and God and ignorance causing the bondage of the subtle and gross body recedes.

1:- That one is an independent agent of an action—VJ.

14. The means whereby the mind can be withdrawn from all other objects and can be easily and properly concentrated in me has been proclaimed by me through my disciples like Sanaka and others.

Uddhava submitted :

15. I wish to know the form you assumed when you imparted the knowledge of this Yoga to Sanaka and others (as they were earliest in creation and as such much anterior to you who are born at the fag end of Dvāpara).

The Lord replied :

16. Sanaka and others, the mind-born sons of god Brahmā asked their father about the subtle and the ultimate stage of yoga<sup>1</sup> (or the knowledge or realization of the Lord).

Sanaka and others submitted

17. O Lord ! The mind naturally gets attached (and enters) the objects of enjoyment, while the objects (so enjoyed) enter into the mind ( by implanting themselves as latencies). How can a person wishing to transcend them both in order to get himself liberated from Samsāra divorce them mutually ?

The Lord said :

18. At this submission of the problem, the great self-created god Brahmā, the Creator of all beings, contemplated deeply over it, but as his mind was engrossed in the activity of creation, he could not pin-point the root of the question.

19. With the desire of knowing the solution of the problem (lit. going to the other end of the question) god Brahma-deva concentrated his mind on me Assuming the form of a swan<sup>2</sup> I presented myself near him.

1. About the subtle process of Yoga and the nature of the Soul (or the Lord)—EK.

2. Just as a swan has the capability to separate milk from water (if a mixture of the two is presented to it), the Lord went there to show them the process of separating the object of senses from the mind—ŚR.

20. Seeing me, they approached me and bowed my feet, with god Brahmā as their leader, they enquired of me (through Brahmā) 'Who are You ?'

21. When I was thus accosted by the sages who were eager to know the truth, please listen attentively from me, O Uddhava, what I explained to them.

22*. If there be non-difference or non-multiplicity in the reality (i. e. the real entity) of the Soul (and if you are putting the question with reference to the Soul), how can such a question arise, O Brāhmaṇas, and on what basis can I reply (as due to one-ness of Soul, I cease to be a distinct entity).

23 ** (If your question is relating to this physical body of mine it is equally meaningless). When, in reality (from the point of the constituents of the physical bodies of all beings) all beings are the same substance inasmuch as they are constituted of the same five gross elements. Hence the question "Who are you" is merely a verbal expression signifying nothing.<sup>1</sup>

24. Please grasp this firmly that whatever is perceived by mind, expressed by speech or apprehended by sight or by any other sense is Me and nothing else but Myself

25.*** The mind enters (gets enmeshed) in the objects of senses and the objects (permanently) imprint (their latencies)

*(i) The question "Who are you" is untenable as both sentient and non-sentient entities and the Paramātman are one. For I am the Inner-Controller of you all—The questioners.

(ii) If in your view, the reality about Paramātman be one (not-many) how can the question "Who are you" be tenable? If you presume manyness of the reality, the use of the singular number to many is untenable.

** All the five categories of beings viz., gods, human beings, manes (pitṛs), Gandharvas and Asuras are inferior to Hiranyagarbha and are not fit to be worshipped and as such are equals. Owing to this uniqueness of mine whom god Brahmā and others worship, this question is superfluous on the mind and both the objects and the mind constitute the body of the jīva whose soul is I myself, O my (grand) sons.<sup>1</sup>

26.* Realizing my one-ness with him, the jīva should renounce (and free himself from the bonds of) both the mind which gets involved into sense-objects by constantly indulging into them and the sense-objects born of the mind which leave their imprints on it. (in the form of reminiscences).

27. Wakefulness, the dream-state and deep sleep are the three states of the mind caused by the (dominance of) three guṇas,<sup>2</sup> the jīva, being the witness of these states, is conclusively determined to be distinct from them.

28.** As this bondage is superimposed on the Ātman by Buddhi (mind or intellect) and is thus the cause of samsāra (involvement in the cycle of births and deaths) and as this (wrongly) attributes the functions of guṇas to Ātman, one should firmly establish oneself in me who, as the fourth state, transcend those three states (and thus give up this bondage). And hereby the mind and the sense objects get (automatically) divorced.

29. Comprehending thoroughly that bondage is caused to the Soul due to Ahaṁkāra (false identification of the body with the Soul) and that it compromises the original blissful nature of the Soul, and is thus the cause of misery, he should abhor it. He should (then) establish himself (through meditation) in the fourth state, viz. Lord Vāsudeva and give up all thoughts about sense objects (and be free from the fear of samsāra).

30. So long as the notion regarding the reality of diver-

1. The combination of the objects of senses and the mind which constitutes the body is an adjunct or the limiting condition superimposed on jīva which is essentially Brahman—ŚR.

*. It is by contemplation of my essential nature that both are divorced from each other. madrūpe cintyamāne sati . . cittam guṇāṁstyajati guṇāś cittam tyajanti—VR.

2. VR quotes an authority which attributes wakefulness to sattva, the dream-state to rajas and deep sleep to tamas.

** (The gist only) Paramātman is not affected by the three states (viz. wakefulness, dream and deep sleep). When the jīva who is a part of Paramātman's body becomes firmly established in him, he transcends these three states and works out the divorce between the objects (guṇas) and the mind—VR.

sity<sup>1</sup> (in the world) is not completely removed by means of various reasonings, the man is (as good as) asleep (i. e. ignorant)<sup>2</sup> though he be awake i. e. diligent in performing karmas, like unto a dreamer thinking himself awake while he is actually in a dream.

31. All objects other than the self (e. g. the physical body) being unreal, the differences created by them (for example difference in varṇas, castes and Āśramas—stages in human life), the goals promised (e. g. godhood in the heaven) and their causes (viz. acts prescribed in the Vedas for attaining these goals) are all unreal and non-existent like scenes in a dream.

32.* He who, while in the waking state, experiences through all his cognitive and conative sense-organs the external objects which are transient and changing every moment, who, while in the dream state, enjoys mentally objects similar (to those perceived in wakeful condition) and who, in deep sleep, withdraws them all, is one and the same, the controller of all sense-organs and the witness of the three states (of wakefulness, dream and deep slumber), as he (being the common factor in these states), remembers them all.

33. Having reasoned thus logically and arrived at the definite conclusion that these three stages of the mind (described above) are caused by the (three) gunas (of Māyā) and are superimposed on me (as jīva) by my own deluding potency, and having cut asunder the Ego (Ahaṁkāra), the root and receptacle of all doubts (about the identity of Paramātmān and the jīva) the plurality of jīvas, etc.) with the sharp sword of knowledge whetted by inference (arrived at by logical concomitance and discontinuation), by precepts of the saints (as well by śruti texts (Brahma Sūtras and Upaniṣads), a person should contemplate me as abiding in his heart.

* VJ : Lord Hari, present in the right eye, and known as Viśva, shows to jīva (who is ever dependent on him) various momentary things in the wakeful state. Viṣṇu is present in the throat and is the controller of senses and is called Taijasa. He shows in the dream state all objects similar to those in wakeful condition and their imprints are in the heart. In the state of deep sleep, he is present in the heart and is called Prājña. He withdraws all senses, gives the bliss of sleep to the jīva. As noted by Smṛtis as well as Śrūtis, Hari, the Supreme Lord, is the Ruler of senses and the witness of the three stages of wakefulness, dream and deep slumber. Hence to regard Paramātmā and jīva as identical is a mistake.

34.* One should realize that this (phenomenal world) is simply an illusion, only a play or work of the mind, which is just apparent and evanescent, extremely unsteady like the illusion of a circle described by a revolving fire-brand. He should see through it that consciousness, though one, appears as many and that threefold difference in states brought about by the projection of the three gunas is nothing but Māyā (illusion).

35. Having withdrawn his eye (thoughts) from that (visible world, his body, etc.), he should rid himself of all thirsts (the eṣaṇās—desire for money, reputations, etc.) and remain inactive and silent. Thus becoming desireless, he should remain absorbed in the bliss of self-realisation, If, in spite of this, the body, etc. is perceived (when not in meditation) for sheer physical needs such as due to hunger, thirst, calls of nature), it, having been once discarded as unreal (and something other than the Ātman), will not (be powerful enough to) create any misapprehension or illusion (and disturb one's meditation), although the memory or the impressions of the body or of the phenomenal world may remain till the death of one's body.

36. A person who has attained perfection in spiritual wisdom (and is absorbed in the bliss of the Soul) is not conscious whether his transient body is in the sitting posture or standing, even though by means of that very body he has realized the essential nature of his Ātman. He is unaware if his body comes or goes to any place according to his Karma or the will of the Lord, just as a man dead drunk with wine is not conscious whether his garment is on his person or has fallen off.

*. VJ. (Only the difference in interpretation noted) One should realize that Paramātmān becomes many under different conditions is a wrong notion. To regard Vijñāna or blissful Brahman as different in different forms is a mis-apprehension. It is the wrong notion projected by the three gunas, sins and other conditions.

37. So long as the fund of merits and demerits (Karmas) which has brought the body into being, is not exhausted, this body (along with its vital principle and sense-organs) definitely continues to survive, as it is under the control of the Providence. But a person who has mastered all the stages of Yoga till the final stage called Samādhi (Perfect concentration and absorption in the Ātman) and has realized Reality, does not resort to the dreamlike unreal world (his body, relation, property, etc) any more than an awakened person to the objects in the dream.

38. What has been expounded by me now to you, O, Brāhmaṇas, is the secret essence of the paths of Sāṅkhya and Yoga. Please know me to be Yajña, Lord Viṣṇu himself who has come here with the object of teaching (and explaining) to you (the secret of) the righteous path.

39. I am the ultimate goal of the paths of Sāṅkhya and Yoga, of virtue (both in its theoretical and practical aspects), of prowess, of prosperity, of glory and of selfcontrol, O the best of Brāhmaṇas.

40. All excellent attributes like impartiality, non-attachment which are not caused by the qualities like sattva, rajas and tamas, find an asylum in me who am devoid of ordinary qualities and above wants, the friend (of all beings), nay the very Soul of them all.

41. In this way, sages like Sanaka and others got their doubts explained by me. Having worshipped me with intense devotion, they extolled me in hymns and praise.

42. Duly worshipped by them and celebrated in hymns by the great sages, I returned to my own region while Brahmā and other sages were just witnessing.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

The Path of Devotion and the Method of Meditation

Uddhava said :

1. Expert expositors of Vedas state that there are many courses leading to the final emancipation of the Soul. Are they important in their own way depending on the adopter or is one of them prominent (in preference to the rest), O Kṛṣṇa ?

2. The path of Devotion which is self-dependent (or disinterested) has been taught by you, O Lord. By following it, all attachment is warded off and the mind establishes itself in you.

The Lord replied :

3. In due course of time, this word of Mine which came to be designated as the Veda became extinct at the time of Deluge. At the beginning of Creation (of the universe), I communicated it to god Brahmā. It consisted of the dharma (the righteous duty) of devoting one's mind to me exclusively.

4. The Lore was taught by Brahmā to his eldest son (Svāyambhuva) Manu. From him (Manu) the seven Brāhmaṇa sages, Bhṛgu and others, learnt it.

5-6. From those fathers (of creation) their progeny, gods, Dānavas (demons), Guhyakas (Yakṣas) human beings, Siddhas Gandharvas, Cāraṇas, Kindevas (secondary deities), Kinnaras Nāgas (serpents), Rākṣasas (Ogres), Kimpuruṣas (sub-human species with man-like appearance) and others learnt it. But being born with the dominance of different proportion of) attributes like Sattva, Rajas and Tamas they were of varied natural proclivities.

7. The natural tendencies which distinguish the different species from one another, differentiate their understanding as well. It is according to the nature of these that different and varied verbal expression (and interpretation of the Vedas) severally flow out.

8. It is in this manner that due to a variety in their natures, there is a diversity of understanding owing to hereditary and traditional interpretations (even though they themselves have not studied the Vedas) while others accept anti-Vedic heretic views.

9. Men whose minds are deluded by my Māyā enunciate various means of achieving the highest good according to their past acts (Karmas) and tastes.

10. Some (i. e. Mīmāṃsakas) hold that performance of (sacrifices and other) acts prescribed in the Vedas leads to the summum bonum; others (viz. poets and writers on rhetorics) regard (good) renown as the highest blessing. Sages like Vāt-syāyana regard sexual enjoyment as the highest blessing; Yogīs advocate truthfulness, self-control and quiescence (as leading to the highest goal). Realists (like politicians) say that affluence, executive power as the highest purpose in life; some regard performance of sacrifices, worship of deities, austerities, gifts, self-denial (like the vows yama and niyama) as the highest goal in life while materialists advocate liberality and enjoyment as the highest goal.

11. All these (above-mentioned) regions are the culminations of their acts and as such they have a beginning and an end (i. e. are temporary). They give rise to grief, end up in ignorance, afford trivial pleasures and are full of grief and anxiety (even while they are being enjoyed).

12. O gentle Uddhava ! How can the (incomparable) happiness be enjoyed by people who have given themselves to sensual pleasure—the happiness which is shared with me by persons who have given up attachment to all things without expecting anything in return, and have dedicated their mind to me.

13. All quarters are blissful unto him who owns nothing in this world, is self-controlled, serene in mind, regards all as equals and finds perfect delight in me.

14. He who has dedicated his heart to me does not hanker after the highest post (of god Brahmā) or the position of the rulership over gods or sovereignty over men or lordship over the subterranean regions or the mystic power of yoga or the Final Emancipation (Mokṣa) from which there is no return to Saṃsāra. He wishes to have nothing else but me.

15. Neither god Brahmā (who is born from me) nor Śaṅkara nor Saṅkarāṇa (my brother Balarāma) nor my Consort, goddess Śrī, nay not even my Soul is so dear to me as (a devotee like) you.

16. I always follow the foot-steps of a sage who expects nothing (in return for his penance or service), is tranquil, free from the feeling of enmity, looking all with an equal eye (regarding all impartially as equals), so that I can get myself<sup>1</sup> purified

17. Others cannot comprehend (much less realize), the immeasurable extent of the pure blissful state of mine which is unsullied by desires but which is enjoyed by the ego-less exalted souls who are perfect 'have-nots' (possessing nothing), and whose hearts are not attached to anything but are exclusively devoted to me; whose minds are tranquil, full of kindness to all beings, and whose hearts are untouched by desires.

18. My devotee, who (in the primary stage), may not have control over his senses, will be disturbed by (the attraction of) the objects of senses, but is not generally overpowered by them due to his intense growing devotion.

19. Just as fire which is ablaze with flames reduces fuel to ashes, similarly devotion concentrated on me, burns down all the sins, O Uddhava.

20. Neither the path of Yoga nor that of Sāṅkhya or Dharma (righteous duties prescribed by Veda) or the study of the Vedas or performance of austerities or renunciation lead a person attain to me as does the intensive and well-advanced devotion.

21. I, the very beloved soul of saints, am realized through unswerving devotion and faith. Exclusive devotion established in me purifies even outcastes like the cāṇḍālas from their lowly birth.

22. Neither Dharma (righteousness even though) coupled with truthfulness and mercy nor knowledge reinforced by austerities can thoroughly purify of sins a person who is devoid of devotion.

23. How can the heart be cleansed of impurities without the development of Devotion? And can intense devotion be indicated if the hairs do not stand (out of devotional love), and the heart melted with intense emotion (for god) and the tears of joy trickled down (the cheeks).

1. ŚR.: So that I can purify all the worlds which abide in me.

24. He is really overwhelmed with intense devotion whose voice is choked with emotion and oral expression is faltering, whose heart melts (through his love for the Lord), who laments frequently (at his separation from the Lord) and laughs at time (with the sweet memory of the Lord's mercy). Throwing away all bashfulness (or unmindful of social etiquettes), he sings loudly and dances—such a person endowed with my devotion purifies the world.

25. Just as gold, when heated in fire, sheds off its dross and attains its pure state, so also the Soul rids himself of his impurities (and imprints of previous karmas) in heart through (intense) devotion to me and immediately gets absorbed in me. (lit. resorts to me).

26. The more the heart (of a person) gets purified by constantly) listening to and glorifying my sanctifying stories (and repeating my name), the more it is able to visualize the subtle thing (viz. Paramātmān), just as the eye can perceive minute objects (or underground treasures) when medicinal (or mystically charged) collyrium is applied to it

27. (Just as) the mind of a person constantly brooding over objects of senses gets attached to them, the mind of a person who is constantly meditating on me becomes absorbed in me.

28. Therefore giving up all thoughts of unreal worthless worldly objects as imaginary things or cravings in a dream you should purify your mind with exclusive devotion unto me and firmly concentrate it on me.

29. Avoiding from a distance association with women and those associated with women<sup>1</sup> (and those who cherish the misleading notion of one's identity with the Lord), a person should subdue his mind and sit in a comfortable secure solitary place and contemplate on me shedding off all sluggishness.

30. No such trouble or bondage would take place in association with others as a person would suffer in the company of women or those who are addicted to women.

1. and works like Vātsyāyana's Kāma-sūtra (ŚR.)

Uddhava submitted:

31. May you be pleased, O Lord of Lotus-eyes to enlighten me on the methodology of meditation—in what manner, in what form and as what, a person desirous of Liberation should contemplate you.

The Lord explained:

32-33. Seated on a level seat (which is neither too high nor too low and is covered with a soft blanket (keeping) one's body erect, in a comfortable bodily posture (not necessarily a particular yogic posture like Padmāsana), placing the palms (open) on the laps and fixing one's gaze on the tip of the nose (for mental concentration), one should cleanse the path of vital breath (the respiratory system) by the process of Prāṇāyāma—slow inhalation (with the left nostril) called Pūraka, retention of breath known as Kumbhaka and slow exhalation of Recaka (with the right nostril) and in the reverse order, one should slowly practice it (prāṇāyāma) retaining all the while control over the senses (technically known as pratyāhāra).

34. One should propel with one's breath the sacred sound Om which, like a fine thread of lotus, is uninterruptedly jingling like a bell in the heart and then invest it with a nasal sound.<sup>1</sup>

35. In this way, he should invest his breath with Prāṇava (Om) and practise the breath-control ten times, at three times (morning, noon and the evening). Thus, he will attain control over his breath within a month.

36. He should contemplate that the heart that lies in the interior of his body like a lotus-bud drooping down with its stalk upwards (like the flower of a plantain tree) has blossomed with its eight petals and pericarp turned upwards and opened.

37. He should conceive that the sun, the moon and the fire are placed one over the other in the pericarp (of that lotus). He should contemplate in that fire, my form so auspicious to meditate upon.

38. He should visualize my form as symmetrical, graciously gentle, with a charming countenance and four long beautiful arms, extremely graceful with a shapely neck, beautiful cheeks and bright smiles.

39. (He should contemplate my form as having) dazzling alligator-shaped ear-rings beautifying my symmetrical ears, wearing garments of cloth of gold, in complexion dark-blue like clouds, and bearing on (the right and left side of my bosom the Śrī-vatsa mark and the abode of the goddess Śrī.

40. (He should conceive my form as) embellished with a conch (Pāñcajanya), a discus (Sudarśana) a mace (Kaumodakī) a lotus and a garland of forest-flowers (Vanamālā), with feet embellished with shining anklets and surrounded with halo of effulgent Kaustubha gem.

41. (He should meditate on my form as) adorned with a resplendent crown, bracelets, a girdle and armlets, beautiful in every part of the body, fascinating to the heart and with beautiful countenance and eye shedding grace (on the devotees) and very comely and delicate. One should concentrate one's mind on all the parts of my form.

42. Having withdrawn one's senses from their objects, a wise person should, with the help of his intellect, the controller of the chariot in the form of one's body, direct it, concentrating on me completely.

43. After withdrawing the mind so spread over the whole of my personality, one should (try to) concentrate on one limb only. He should now no more think of other limbs but should contemplate on my countenance beaming with smiles.

44. Withdrawing his mind which is thus fixed up there

(on my face), he should (now) concentrate it on the sky (i.e. my form which is the ultimate cause of all). (Lastly) diverting his mind from that, he should establish himself in me, the Absolute Brahman, and should not think of anything else (merging all the distinction between the subject, object and the process of thinking).

45. When one has thus established his mind (and intellect in me, he visualises me in his own self and his self in me the Universal Soul, just as (an individual) light is merged with the elemental light.

46. The mind of a yogi who concentrates his mind in this extremely intensive course of meditation, will, in no time, attain to the state of nirvāṇa (perfect serenity and bliss) and the misapprehension regarding substance, knowledge and action (or the triad of the Seer, Seeing and the Seen or the three types of miseries resulting from Fate, beings or forces of nature) completely disappears.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

The Super-normal Powers Attained by Yoga

1. Super-normal powers (Siddhis) attend upon a yogin who has subdued his senses, is devoted to me, has attained breath-control and has concentrated his mind on me.

Uddhava said:

2. By what (type of) concentration and by what methodology, what kind of super-normal power can be mastered? How many such mystic powers are there, O Acyuta? You are the bestower of such powers to Yogins (and You alone know it).

The Lord explained:

3. Eighteen kinds of super-normal powers and (the same number of corresponding modes of) concentrations (for attaining these Siddhis) have been proclaimed by those who are thoroughly proficient in Yoga. Out of them, eight are found in their perfection in me<sup>1</sup> (and are found to a lesser extent in those who have attained similarity of form to me) while the remaining ten are acquired by the increasing dominance of sattva-guṇa.

4. Atomization, levitation and magnification are the three super-normal powers pertaining to the physical body of the Yogin. The power called prāpti means the ability to act through the senses of others by establishing contacts with deities presiding over those senses (and thus a Yogi can control all beings); Prākāmya is the power to enjoy all things (in the heaven) described in the śāstras and those hidden under the earth as well as objects in the visible world. Isitā 'Ruling capacity' is the ability to use Māyā (and other lower powers) for attaining one's desire.

5. Vasitā (self-control) is non-attachment to objects of sensuous enjoyment<sup>2</sup> and the eighth super normal power is the ability to enjoy fully whatever pleasure one wishes (and hence it is called Kāmāvasāyitā). O gentle Uddhava, these eight powers are considered to be inherent in me<sup>3</sup> (to the highest degree).

6. Immunity from changes of this body (such as hunger, thirst, grief, delusion, old age and death), ability to see and hear from any distance, power of reaching bodily to one's desired destination with the speed of the mind, ability to assume any form (at will), capacity to enter the body of any other person (leaving one's own body in a secure place).

1. VR.: They are useful in attaining to me while the other ten are conducive to the enjoyment of objects in this world and lead to samsāra again.

EK.: They are attainable in their perfection only to those who have established themselves in me but they, being absorbed in me and unaware even of their body, are indifferent to them. The remaining ten manifest and present themselves to a person full of pure sattva. —EB. 15. 38-41.

2. Whereby one attains my characteristics—EK.

3. It is only one of these super-normal powers, that the aspirant after me can hope to get after utmost efforts—EK.

7. (Ability) to cast off one's body at will, (capacity) to see (and participate) in the sports of gods with celestial nymphs, the accomplishment of one's desired objects and ability to exercise authority without any obstruction or insubordinate.

(These ten are the minor mystical powers).

8. Ability to know the past, present and the future, mastery over and capacity to remain unaffected by the pairs of opposites (like heat and cold, pleasure and pain, etc.), capacity to read the minds of others, the power to neutralise the effects of the fire, the water, the poison and such other things and to suffer no defeat (in any undertaking).

9. These super-normal powers which are accomplished through specific Yogic concentrations have been specially mentioned by me. Now learn from me what type of mystic power is attained by which type of concentration and its procedure.

10. He who concentrates his mind (which also is subtle like an atom) on me as abiding in the subtle form of elements (tanmātrās) and adores me as a subtle element attains the power of atomizing his body.

11. Focusing his mind on me and contemplating me, the all-pervading Supreme Soul as ensouling the principle called Mahat and extending the mind to that dimension, attains the super-normal power of 'magnification' and concentrating the mind on me as abiding in any of the bhūtas (gross elements) he possesses the all-pervasiveness of that particular element.

12*. Having (concentratedly) devoted his mind on me as abiding in the atoms of the gross elements, (and meditating upon me as the subtlest of subtle division of Time) the Yogin attains the power of subtleness.

13. Having thoroughly concentrated his mind on me wholly as abiding in the Sāttvika type of Ego (Ahaṁkāra) and regarding me as the indwelling Soul of all the sense-organs, the yogin attains the mystic power called Prāpti (enabling him to function through the senses of others).

* VJ. Attaching his heart on me as the pervader of the most subtle division of time and the subtle-most atoms of the elements the Yogin attains the power of subtleness.

14. He who establishes his mind on me as abiding in the Sūtra (in its all-contacting aspect)<sup>1</sup> attains the mystic power of the highest order called Prākāśya<sup>2</sup> possessed by me as ensouling me in the Mahat tattva which is born of the Avyakta.

15. He who concentrates his mind on me as Viṣṇu (the pervader of universe), the Controller of the Māyā consisting of three guṇas and the Indweller of Time attains the mystic power of impelling all bodies and the individual souls.

16. The Yogin who focuses his mind on me as Nārāyaṇa, the Fourth Principle,<sup>3</sup> one specifically designated by the term 'Bhagavān'<sup>4</sup> attains the same characteristics as mine and becomes the master of power called Vasitā (absolute non-attachment to everything though he controls them all).

17. The Yogī who concentrates his pure mind on me as the attributeless Brahman, attains Supreme Spiritual joy

1. VR. explains that although the Mahat is mentioned in the previous verse (No. 11) there the emphasis is on its physical aspects while here the Sūtra aspect of the Mahat connecting it with all things, is implied. VJ. interprets that the Sūtra is the chief vital breath (mukhya prāṇa) which pervades the Mahat.

2. According to VJ. Prākāśya is the supreme capacity to know the Vedas and everything else (sarva-vedādi-jñāna-śraiṣṭhyāpādakam prākāśyam) and it is obtained through the favour of Prāṇa, Bhāratī and Mahāviṣṇu:

*Sarve guṇās tu Prāṇasya Paramātma-prasādataḥ/
prāṇa-Viṣṇoḥ prasādēna bhāratyāḥ samprakīrtitāḥ//*

EK. states that with this Supernormal power (when gifted by the Lord) the yogi is capable of creating crores of Brahmāṇḍas (EB. 15.85-86) But ŚR specifically asserts that the yogi never gets the power of creating the universe:

na tu viśva-sṛṣṭyādi-kartṛtva-Lakṣaṇam /

1. There have been different opinions about the previous three stages transcended before attaining the fourth: The following are the 1st three stages:

ŚR.: (1) Virāṭ (2) Hiraṇyagarbha and (3) Kāraṇa

EK.: (1) Jiva (2) Śiva and (3) Prakṛti

(2) Wakefulness (jāgratī), dream state (svapna) and deep sleep (Suṣupti)

2. ŚR quotes the famous verse which enumerates the six excellences of the Lord, viz. absolute mastery over the universe, perfect righteousness, highest glory, affluence, perfect knowledge and complete dispassion.

aīśvaryaśya samagraśya, dharmasya, yaśasaḥ śrīyaḥ / jñāna-vairāgyaḥ saiva śaṇṇām bhaga itīraṇā//

and bliss when all desires cease altogether (Hence it is called Kāmāvasāyitā).

18. He who fixes his mind on me, the Lord of Śveta-dvīpa, who am absolutely pure (uninfluenced by Rajas, and Tamas), and the very Dharma incarnate, attains whiteness (i.e. absolute purity untainted by guṇas), and becomes free from the six waves or changes (viz. hunger and thirst, old age and death, delusion and grief which affect all beings).

19. This swan (i.e. the individual soul) who mentally meditates on the (ever-abiding “unstruck” spiritual) sound in me who am the Soul of the sky (and the cosmic vital breath as well), attains the supernormal power of hearing (from any distance), the sounds of all beings (as all words or utterances repose in the sky.)

20. With his eye-sight united with the Sun and the Sun with eye and meditating on me in the solar-ocular union becomes endowed with a subtle vision and can view everything in the universe (This is the dūra-darśana siddhi).

21*. When the mind and the body along with the vital breath are properly established in me,<sup>1</sup> (one attains the miraculous power called mano-java and) due to the efficacy of this method of meditation. The body is transported (with the speed of the mind) wherever the mind goes (This is the “dūra-gamana-siddhi”—potency to go anywhere at will).

22. When a Yogī utilises his mind as the material cause and desires to assume whatever form he likes, he can transform himself that way at his sweet will, as he depends on the power of contemplating on me (who am of inconceivable potency and of innumerable forms).

23. If a person accomplished in the power of entering another person’s body has perfectly controlled his vital airs and senses desires to enter the body of another person, he should contemplate that he has occupied that body. Leaving his own (previous) body (along with the chief vital air—prāṇa and the astral body he should enter the external cosmic air and thus enter in the form of air (through the nostrils of that body) into the new body as a six-legged black-bee does (from one flower to another). (This power is known as para-kāyā-praveśa (entrance into another person's body)).

24. (Controlling the downward movement of the vital breath) by blocking the rectum with one's heels and pushing up (by slow degrees), the vital air (through sūṣumnā nāḍī) through the heart, chest, throat and the crown of the head, he should then propel it through the aperture in the crown of the head (which is called Brahmarandhra) directing it to its destination—The parabrahman (or any other state he wishes to have)—and cast off his physical body.

25. If a Yogi is desirous to enjoy sportive life in heaven, he should contemplate on the pure Sattva in me. And celestial damsels of sāttvika nature attend upon him with their celestial cars.

26. A person who establishes his mind in me who am reality and is absolutely devoted to me, attains and enjoys the objects of his desires to have at a particular time and in the specific manner, according to his will.

27*. He who is established in my state who am the ordainer of all and quite independent, shall never meet reverses anywhere and his order will be like my commandment (which can never be thwarted). (This is the potency of inviolable commandment—apratihatājñā).

28. The yogin whose mind has become (absolutely) pure by devotion to me and who is conversant with the way of concentrating his mind on me (who am the creator, protector and destroyer of the Universe), attains the knowledge of the past, present and future along with that of the birth and the death (of himself and the world as well as the mind of others).

29. The sage whose mind reposes in contemplation on me (who am above the pair of opposites like heat and cold), gets his physical body seasoned with yoga and is not adversely affected by fire and other (troubles from water, wind, cold, arms, etc.), just as aquatic animals are not affected by water. (This power is called advandvatā or 'transcendence over opposites' which leads to avaṣṭambha siddhi or power of neutralisation of the harmful forces).

30. He who meditates (with a concentrated mind) on the various forms and incarnations of mine (exhibiting various powers and) adorned with the śrī-vatsa mark and my missiles (like Sudarśana, etc.) and accompanied with my banner (with the emblem of Garuḍa), umbrella and chowries, would never be vanquished.

31. All the supernormal powers detailed above attend upon the sage who propitiates me according to the appropriate methods of concentration (described in the above-mentioned verses).

32. What super-normal power can be difficult to accomplish in the case of a sage who, having controlled his senses, subdued his mind and mastered breath-control, firmly concentrates his mind on me ?

33. But in the case of persons who practise the excellent course of yoga in order to realize me through my grace, the wise call these siddhis as impediments, as they involve waste of time (in God-realization).

34. Whatever super-normal powers are accomplished through birth (e.g. power of aviation to birds or gods), medicinal plants, penance, and utterance of mantras,<sup>1</sup> are all obtained through yoga, but one cannot attain the highest fruit of yoga (viz. emancipation from samsāra) through these other means.

35. Being the source and the Lord of all these supernormal powers, I am their controller. Equally I am the master of yoga (paths of union with God), of Sāṅkhya (the path of knowledge leading God-realization), of Dharma (righteous duties as ordained by the Vedas), and even of the exponents of Brahma (or the Veda).

1. janmauṣadhimantra-tapaḥ-samādhijāḥ siddhayaḥ.

36. I am the Soul of all embodied beings, their Inner Controller who pervades them (even externally), though I myself am unenclosed. Just as the (five) elements permeate living beings in the world from inside and outside, so I pervade them all and still retain my independent existence.

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

*Description of Viṣṇu's Glorious Manifestations**

Uddhava said:

1. You are the veritable Supreme Brahman having neither the beginning nor end. You are unobscured (by Māyā or its products). You are the Maker of creation, protection and destruction of all beings.

2. Although you are very difficult to be cognised by persons who have not controlled their minds, O Lord, persons who have understood the real import of the Vedas propitiate you (by contemplating on you in the proper manner), in your real form as abiding in all beings high or low.

3. Pray, be pleased to narrate to me the various objects or beings (in which you have manifested yourself and<sup>1</sup>), by devoutly contemplating on you through which the great sages (of yore) have attained final beatitude.

4. You are the creator and Protector of beings. As their Inner Controller, you abide in them without being manifest to them. Being deluded by your Māyā, the beings cannot see you who, however, perceive them all.

* If the previous chapter bears comparison with the Vibhūti-pāda of the Yogasūtras by Patañjali, this chapter is an echo of chapter X of the BG. called Vibhūti-yoga. A number of verses and parts of verses being common both to this text and the BG., verses are not quoted in Footnotes to conserve space.

1. And the procedure of contemplating on you in those several objects and beings—VJ.

5. O Lord of infinite glories ! Be pleased to describe unto me whatever glorious forms of yours have been vested by you with special powers and have been manifested on the earth, in the heavens, in the subterranean regions and in all the quarters. I bow to your lotus feet which are the abode of all sacred places.

The glorious Lord said:

6. O Uddhava ! You are the excellent one among persons who make (intelligent) queries (with proper understanding). A question similar to this very question was put to me by Arjuna who was eager to fight with the enemies, at Kurukṣetra.<sup>1</sup>

7. Knowing that killing one's kinsfolk for the purpose of obtaining a kingdom is both censurable and irreligious, he, like a common man, came to believe (falsely) that he would be the killer and the other soul would be killed by him and he desisted from fighting.

8. At that time that tiger-like (Valiant) hero who was made to realize (the correct philosophical position in the matter) by logical reasoning, spoke to me in the same manner at the battle-front, as you did now.

9. I am the (Indwelling) Soul, a friend and the Ruler of all these beings, O Uddhava. In fact I constitute all beings; I am the Creator, Protector and Destroyer of these beings.

10. I am the motive force among the mobile; I am the Time-Spirit (Kāla) among those that bring other things under control. I am the state of equipoise of the guṇas and I constitute the property natural in things possessing properties.

11. I am the sūtra, the first evolute of Prakṛti—the active aspect in the products of guṇas; I am the greatness or the principle called Mahat among things with large dimensions. Among the subtlest of things, I am the vital Principle and among the invincibles, I am the mind.

12. Of the Vedas, I am god Brahmā (Hiraṇyagarbha who is the first teacher of the Vedas); of mantras, I am the

1. Strictly speaking Vinasāna designates the spot in Kurukṣetra where the Sarasvatī disappeared (MBH. Vana 82.111) but here the battlefield of Kurukṣetra in general is implied.

Praṇava (Om) constituted of the three syllabus (A U M); of the sounds represented by the letters of the alphabet, I am (the first sound) A; of all the metres, I am the Gāyatrī metre (consisting of three feet).

13. I am Indra out of all celestials and the fire-god among all the Vasus. Of the Sun-gods, I am Viṣṇu and out of the (eleven) Rudras, I am Lord Śiva.

14. Out of Brāhmaṇa sages, I am Bhṛgu and out of royal sages I am Manu (the progenitor of the human race). I am Nārada out of celestial sages, and the wish-yielding cow, Havirdhānī amongst cows.

15. Out of masters of super-normal powers (siddhas), I am Kapila; out of birds, I am Garuḍa, I am Dakṣa out of Prajāpatis (The lords presiding over creation) and am Aryamā out of the manes or departed ancestors.

16. O Uddhava ! Know that I am Prahlāda, the king of Asuras among the demons (Daityas). Out of constellations and medicinal plants, I am Soma, and I am Kubera out of Yakṣas and Rākṣasas.

17. Know me to be Airāvata (the elephant of Indra) among mighty elephants and Varuṇa, the Lord of aquatic animals. Know me to be the Sun among the heavenly luminous bodies emitting heat and light and the Lord of the terrestrial globe among human beings.

18. Out of horses, I am Uccaiṣravas and gold out of (excavated) metals; out of deities dispensing justice and punishment. I am Yama (the god of Death) and out of serpents know that I am Vāsuki.

19. I am Lord Ananta (Śeṣa) out of the serpent-kings and a lion (lord of beasts) among animals with horns and fangs. Know me to be the fourth Āśrama, (sannyāsa) among the Āśramas (stages of life) and the first Varṇa (Brāhmaṇas) among the classes in society.

20. I am the Gaṅgā among sacred rivers and streams and the sea among all the reservoirs of water. I am the bow among weapons and god Śiva, the slayer of Tripura, among archers.

21. Among all abodes, I am mount Meru (the abode of gods) and of all steep and inaccessible places, I am the Himālayas. Out of trees, I am the Pippal tree and I am barley of all the (food yielding) plants.

22. Out of all sacrificial priests, I am Vasiṣṭha, and Bṛhaspati (the preceptor of gods) among the experts in the Vedas. Out of all the leaders of armies, know me to be Skanda and god Brahmā of all persons who show people the right path

23. Out of all sacrificial performances, I am Brahma-yajña<sup>1</sup> (the recitation and teaching of Vedas) and non-violence (even by word) out of all sacred vows. Out of all purifying agents like air, fire, sun, water and speech (vāk), I am the purifying power—the sanctifier of all purifying agencies).

24. Out of the (eight) steps or limbs of yoga, I am the absorption of the Self (in Brahma) or Samādhi. I am political wisdom among those who are ambitious of conquests; among the scientific systems of thought, I am the scientific thought system that distinguishes between the matter and spirit (ātman and anātman). I am the insoluble doubt in the quest of the theories of perception of knowledge (known as Khyāti<sup>2</sup> as akhyāti of Mīmāṃsakas, Śūnyakhyāti of Buddhists, asat-khyāti of Naiyāyikas, etc.).

25. I am Śatarūpā (the first woman, Svāyambhuva Manu's wife) out of women, and Svāyambhuva Manu (the progenitor of the human race) out of men. Out of sages, I am Nārāyaṇa and (Sanat—) Kumāra among the observers of celibacy.

26. Of all the duties of righteousness, I am Sannyāsa<sup>3</sup> (the assurance of protection against fear); of all causes conducive to security, I am the thought concentrated within (on the self). Of all the means of retaining secrets, I am sweet

1. Which satisfies gods, sages, manes, living beings and the universe —EK

2. There are five Khyātis, each espoused by a different school of thought. They are enumerated below:

3. Resigning all desire for the reward of all actions to the Lord (anabhisamkṛta-phalo dharmaḥ) —VR.

speech and silence. Of all couples, I am god Brahmā (who divided his person in man and woman).

27. Of all the divisions of Time,<sup>1</sup> I am Samvatsara (a year) and of all seasons, I am the spring (consisting of the months of Caitra and Vaiśākha). Out of the months (of a year), I am Mārgaśīrṣa and out of all constellations of stars, I am Abhijit (that forms the last part of the asterism Uttarāṣādhā and the first of Śrāvaṇa).

28. Out of yugas, I am the Kṛta Age and of all intelligent bold thinkers,<sup>2</sup> I am Asita and Devala. I am Dvaipāyana (son of Parāśara and Satyavatī) among all the classifiers of the Vedas. Of wise politicians, I am the self-controlled Śukra.

29. Among all the divine persons possessing the knowledge of creation and destruction of the universe and the individual and the spiritual wisdom and nescience<sup>3</sup>, I am Vāsudeva while among the supreme devotees of the Lord, I am you (Uddhava).<sup>4</sup> Of all the Kimpuruṣas (demi-gods similar to monkeys) I am Hanumān, while among all the Vidyādharas I am Sudarśana.<sup>5</sup>

30. I am the ruby out of all precious stones; I am the lotus-bud of all delicate and lovely objects. Of the grass of the darbha-type I am Kuśa. Out of all oblations to fire, I am butter made from cow's milk.

31. I am the wealth of the industrialists and businessmen (or those who strive to make money). Among all the gamblers, I am fraudulence. I am fortitude among the endurant persons and the energy among the energetic strivers.

1. Of all those who are vigilant (ŚR.)

2. Persons with fortitude to undergo pair of opposites like pleasure and pain—VR.

3. ŚR. gives the definition of Bhagavān as follows:

utpattiṁ pralayaṁ caiva bhūtdnām agatiṁ gatim/

Vetti vidyām avidyām ca sa vācyaḥ bhagavān iti//

but VR and VJ. follow the usual description of being endowed with six excellences like jñāna, aishvarya, etc.

4. With VJ. the seniority of the best devotees is as follows: Bhīma, Draupadī, Balarāma, Arjuna and lastly Uddhava.

5. vide Supra X. 34.12-18.

32. I am (physical and mental) virility and might among the strong and I am desireless action (of devoted service) among the Sātvatas (the votaries of the Lord). I am the first Supreme manifestation (viz. Vāsudeva) among all the nine manifestations<sup>1</sup> (Vyūhas of the Lord worshipped by followers of the Pāñcarātra Āgama).

33. Out of Gandharvas, I am Viśvāvasu and am Pūrva-citti<sup>2</sup> out of celestial damsels. I am stability among the mountains and the property of scent of the earth.

34. I am the taste among water (liquids). I am the Sun among the bright luminaries; I am the lustre of the Sun, the moon and the stars. I am the sound (the essential characteristic) of the sky.

35. Of all those who are friendly to Brāhmaṇas, I am Bali and I am Arjuna among the warriors. I constitute the creation, sustenance and destruction of all the beings or elements).

36. I am the functions of the sense-organs such as locomotion, expression, excretion, receiving and enjoyment as well as touching, tasting, hearing and smelling. I am the sense of all senses (i.e. the inherent power to perform these functions).

37. I constitute the seven principles which are of the nature of both the cause and the effect, viz. the subtle elements—tanmātrās—of earth, air, sky, water, fire and Ego (Ahaṅkāra) and Mahat; I am also the (sixteen) modifications (which are only the effects and not cause, viz. five gross elements, ten cognitive and conative sense-organs and the mind), the individual soul (who is above causal relation) and the Unmanifest (Prakṛti which is only the cause of all) and (the

38. I form the aggregate of these (Twentyfive principles) the knowledge (of their characteristics) as well as the consequent realization of the definite Truth. Nothing exists without my presence anywhere, as I am both the Supreme Ruler as well as individual soul, the modifications (of Prakṛti) or guṇas as well as the products of these guṇas.<sup>3</sup>

39. The (impossible task of) taking a count of all atoms can be done by me in course of time, but the reckoning of all my manifestations is impossible as millions and millions of universes are continuously being created by me.

40. Wherever there is majesty, affluence and celebrity, authority, modesty, liberality or beauty, fortune, capability, forbearance and precise knowledge of the Truth, there exists my part-manifestation (aṁśa).

41. All these manifestations of mine have been briefly described to you. But these are nothing but freaks of imagination (like the unreal sky-flower) which are only verbally expressed.<sup>4</sup>

42. (Hence) control your speech; rest ain your mind, practise breath-control, subdue your sense-organs, bring your intellect under control by your (sāttvika) intellect so that you will not be liable to return to the path of Samsāra.

43. The recluse (striver on the spiritual path) who does not strictly control his speech and mind with his reasoning power, finds that his sacred vows, austere penance and liberality in gifts leak away like water from an unbaked jar.

1. ŚR. quotes the following Sāṅkhya Kārikā by Īśvara Kṛṣṇa bringing out the implication of this verse:

*mūla-prakṛtir avikṛti-mahadādyāḥ Prakṛti-vikṛtayaḥ sapta/
śoḍaśakaś ca vikāraḥ, na prakṛtir na vikṛtiḥ Puruṣaḥ||*

2. Param—But I am distinct from them as I am the controller of those principles—VJ.

3. I constitute the duality known as God and the individual soul, the guṇas and their products, the Inner Controller of the body as well as the body—ŚR.

4. They are produced directly by my will power and are conveyed by the Vedas—

(ntāṣ-saṅkalpa-mātra-janyāḥ vācā vedena)—VR.

44. Therefore, devoting himself solely and unflinchingly to me and with his intellect full of devotion to me, he should control his mind, speech and breath. It is then alone that he attains Liberation from Samsāra—which is the end of the journey.

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

The Sacred Duties of a Celibate and a Householder

Uddhava said:

1. Formerly (in the previous Kalpa), You have proclaimed the righteous course (Dharma) which was chiefly characterised by Devotion to you. It was conducive to the well-being of persons eligible to follow (the duties prescribed by Vedas) for the (four) classes of Society (varṇas) and the (four) stages of life (Āśramas), but also to all human beings in general.<sup>1</sup>

2. O Lotus-eyed Lord ! It behoves you to kindly explain in details the prescribed course of duties (ordained for everyone) by observing which Devotion (Bhakti) may be developed in men.

3. O mighty-armed Lord of Lakṣmī ! It is reported that in times of yore, you assumed that form of a divine swan<sup>2</sup> and taught this righteous course of a supreme and blissful nature to god Brahmā, O Lord.

4. But, as a pretty long time has elapsed since it was proclaimed by you, it does not at present survive (in human memory) in this mortal world, O slayer of enemies.

1. dvīpadāmapi— This implies that men who do not belong to any varṇa or āśrama (are beyond the pale of Hinduism) may be benefited by developing devotion to the Supreme Self—VJ.

2. vide Supra XI.13

5. There is no person other than you who can propound, practise or defend the Dharma in this world, O immortal Lord. Nor was there any in the assembly of god Brahmā which (the presiding deities of) arts and lores attend in a personal form.

6. O Slayer of Madhu ! When this terrestrial globe is left by you who are the founder, protector and expounder (of this Dharma) who is there to teach this (practically) inexistent course of righteousness, O Lord?

7. Therefore, O Lord who know all the *dharma*s, be pleased to expound to me the righteous course characterised by (and leading to) devotion to you, its nature and its procedure as advisedly prescribed to each of us.

Śrī Śuka said:

8. Thus solicited by the most prominent of his servants (devotee), the glorious Lord Hari was highly pleased and propounded the eternal course of righteous duties conducive to the welfare of mortal beings.

The Lord said:

9. Your query is intimately concerned with and conducive to dharma, inasmuch as it leads to the highest good of men who observe the duties prescribed for (their respective) Āśrama (stage of life) and Varna (class in society). Please listen to its exposition, O Uddhava.

10. In the beginning (of this Kalpa), in the Kṛta Age, there was only one class among men<sup>1</sup> and that class was known as Hamṣa. By their very Birth, people accomplished all their objects in life (by propitiating me and doing nothing else except my devotion). Hence that age came to be known as Kṛta.

1. EK: The society was class-less as there was no division of men in four classes. No recitation of Vedas of different branches and no Karmas were prescribed for observance. The one-class society was called Hamṣa as all men were always engaged in the uninterrupted japa of so'ham (their identity with Brahman) EB. 17.63-64.

11 In that first Age, Pranava i. e. Om constituted the (entire compilation) of the Vedic text (which thus contained no prescriptions and interdictions).

12. At the beginning of the Tretā Age (after the Kṛta-yuga) the three-fold Vedic lore (consisting of the Rgveda, Sāmaveda and Yajurveda) was manifested from my heart through my breath, O blessed Uddhava. Out of that trinity of Vedas, I (who am of the nature of sacrifice) became of threefold (sacrificial) functions (viz. those of Hotṛ, Udgātṛ and Adhvaryu).

13. From the Person of the cosmic Man, the classes of society (varṇas) viz. Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra sprang (respectively) from the mouth, arms, thighs and feet (of the Cosmic Person). And they were severally characterised by their own righteous duties and conduct.

14. The order of householder originated from my loins, and that of life-long celibates from my heart, the order of forest-dwelling hermits from my chest and the order of Sannyāsins from the crown of my head.

15. The natures of persons belonging to the different classes and orders of society follow the source of the limbs (of the Cosmic Man) from which they are evolved. The lower the limb (as source of evolution), the lower the nature of activities, the higher the member of the body (as the source), the nobler the activities.

16. Control over the mind, restraint over senses, austerities, (physical and mental) purity, contentment, forbearance, straightforwardness, devotion to me, mercifulness and truthfulness are the natural qualities of Brāhmaṇas.

17. Majesty, strength, courage, valour, endurance, liberality, industriousness, firmness, friendliness to Brāhmaṇas—these are natural qualities of Kṣatriyas.

18. Faith (in Vedas and preceptors), firm adherence to liberality, absence of hypocrisy, rendering service to Brāhmaṇas dissatisfaction with amassed wealth (urge to acquire more)—these are the characteristics of the Vaiśyas.

19. Rendering sincere service to twice-born castes (Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas), cows and gods and satisfaction with what one gets therein are the natural characteristics of Śūdras.

20. Absence of cleanliness, falsehood, thieving, heterodoxy or want of faith, quarrelsomeness (without a proper cause) strong lust and violent anger and inordinate covetousness—these are found in the nature of the lowest castes.

21. Non-violence (in thought, word and deed) truthfulness, abstention from taking what is not given, freedom from lust, anger and greed, desire to work for the happiness and welfare of all beings—these constitute the righteous duties of all classes of society.

22. Having undergone purificatory rites since his conception and having obtained the second birth through the investiture of the sacred thread (upanayana), the twice-born boy should control his senses and reside in the house of his preceptor and recite the Vedas, study the interpretation thereof as per instructions of the preceptor.

23. (During celibacy) he should wear a girdle of the sacred (Muñja) grass (round his waist), a deer-skin, and have a staff, a string of beads, the sacred thread and a jar of water (made of gourd) and matted locks of hair; he should not brush his teeth nor use clothes washed at a laundry). He should not use a painted seat but should hold sacred grass in his hands (as a symbol of Purity and humble approach to the teacher).

24. He should observe silence at the time of bath, taking meals, offering oblations to the sacred fire, repeating sacred syllables (japa) and at the time of excretion. He should not pare his nails nor remove the hair from the armpits and secret parts of his body.

25. He should observe strict celibacy and should not voluntarily allow his semen to escape. In case of involuntary escape (as in wet-dreams), he should take bath, perform breath control and repeat the Gāyatrī mantra.

26. Pure of body and with concentrated mind, he should silently repeat the Gāyatrī mantra (while performing sandhyā) both in the morning and in the evening<sup>1</sup> and should worship the Fire god (by offering oblations), the Sun-god (by performing sandhyā) and other gods and wait upon the preceptor

(who initiated him with the Gāyatri-mantra), the cows, Brāhmaṇas, elderly men.

27. He should look upon his preceptor as myself (god himself) and should never disrespect him in any way. He should not peep into his weak points considering him an ordinary mortal, for the preceptor represents all gods in himself.

28. He should offer to his preceptor whatever alms and anything else he gets, both in the morning and in the evening. Observing self-control, he should use only what is permitted by his teacher.

29. While rendering service to the preceptor, he (the pupil) should wait upon him with humility (as one of his subordinates), (following him) when he goes out, (resting vigilantly) while he sleeps,<sup>1</sup> (shampooing his feet) when he sits to rest, standing nearby with folded palms when he sits.

30. Behaving himself in this manner and observing strictly his vow of celibacy, he should live in the preceptor's house without indulging into pleasure, till his course of studies is completed.

31. If he is desirous of attaining Maharloka and the Brahmaloka (or god Brahmā's region where Vedas attend in person as stated in verse 5 above), he should adopt the vow of life-long celibacy and dedicate his person<sup>2</sup> to his preceptor for advanced course of studies.

32. Resplendent with Vedic lustre and cleansed of all sins, he should entertain the notion of non-difference (with the universe) and worship me, the Supreme Lord in the sacrificial fire, the preceptor, himself and in all beings.

33. A person who is not a householder (i.e. a celibate or a recluse) should scrupulously avoid (lustful) look, touch, conversation of jokes and such other contacts with women. Nay he should avoid the sight to a sexual intercourse of animals.

34-35. (Physical and mental) purity, Ācamana (sipping water before beginning a sacred rite, etc.) bathing, offering

1. When the teacher is in bed, the pupil should not be there but rest vigilantly somewhere nearby to be able to attend if called.—EB. 17.320.

2. With a view to repay the debt of the preceptor—ŚR.

twilight-prayers (to the sun both in the morning and in the evening), straight-forwardness, visiting sacred places, repeating (silently) sacred syllables (mantras), abstention from touching the untouchable, from eating the forbidden articles of food and from speaking with the un-speechworthy, firm faith that I abide in all beings and control over the mind, speech and the body—This rule of discipline<sup>1</sup> is enjoined to all stages of life (Āśrama), O delight of your family.

36. In this way, the life-long celibate (Brāhmaṇa) who has burnt down all the seeds of Karmas by his rigorously austere penance, and had become absolutely pure and is devoted to me becomes resplendent like fire.

37. If a celibate student who has completed the study and investigation of the Śāstras (according to his need in life), wishes to enter the next stage of life viz. that of a householder, he should pay the educational fees to his preceptor and with the permission of his preceptor, he should take the bath (for terminating his celibate stage, technically known as the Samāvartana saṃskāra).

38. He should enter the house (i. e. householder's stage of life, if sexually inclined) or the forest (i. e. the life of a Vānaprastha, if he desires to purify his mind). If that excellent Brāhmaṇa is already of pure heart, he should renounce the world (and become a sannyāsin). Or (if he so pleases) he may pass from one stage of life to another but never in the reverse order e. g. from Sannyāsa to Vānaprastha<sup>2</sup> etc. (The āśramic order is not binding on my devotees).

39. A person wishing to enter the householder's stage should espouse a befitting girl, with no defect (in heredity, habits or character), junior to him in age and belonging to his own caste (class, varṇas.)

(It is only after marrying the girl of his own caste

1. EK takes the last two, viz. Faith in the immanence of Brahman in all beings and control over mind, speech and the body as common to all Varṇas and Āśramas.

2. Unless a person is absolutely devoted to me, the āśramic order is binding on him. This rule is not binding on my devotees (ŚR).

if he be sexually unsatisfied) he should take a girl from a class in the prescribed serial order.<sup>1</sup>

40. (The duties of) performance of sacrifices, Vedic study and conferring charitable gifts are binding on all twice-born classes (viz. Brāhmaṇa, Kṣātriya and Vaiśya) but acceptance of gifts, teaching of Vedas and (actual) performance of sacrifices are the (additional) duties of Brāhmaṇas.

41. A Brāhmaṇa who considers that acceptance of gifts from others is detrimental to his austerities, Brahmanical (i. e. spiritual) power and glory, should live by the other two means of livelihood (viz. teaching the Vedas and acting as a sacrificial priest). He who feels these two vocations as detracting (to his spiritual position or power,) should live by gleaning grains of corn from the field (when the owner has taken away the produce).

42. This body of a Brāhmaṇa is not certainly meant for trivial enjoyments. It is intended for undergoing distress and austere penance in this world, and infinite bliss (of Mokṣa) after death.

43. He whose mind is content with (what he gets by) gleaning grains of corn (from the fields after the owner had reaped and taken home the food-grains and from the market-place when the market day is over) and who observes the pure and noble duty of offering hospitality to guests and has dedicated his heart to me and is not much addicted to his house (though himself a householder) attains to eternal spiritual peace.

44. Like unto a boat saving a man drowning into a sea, I promptly save from calamities those persons who redeem a Brāhmaṇa devoted to me or as a matter of that anyone who has dedicated himself to me but is undergoing hardships.

45. Like a father protecting his children from difficulties a king should defend his subjects against all calamities. Just as a king-elephant lifts out (of mire) other elephants of his group and comes out of it by dint of his own power, the wise and courageous king should (after redeeming his subject) extricate himself out of the difficulty by his own efforts.

1. ŚR. quotes a Smṛti which allows the anuloma order in marriage: Thus a Brāhmaṇa can marry a girl from Kṣātriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra classes; a Kṣātriya from Vaiśya and Śūdra varṇas and a Śūdra can marry only a Śūdra girl.

46. A king who discharges his duties in this manner, shakes off in this very life, whatever inauspiciousness and evil (that has clung to him), by the merit accruing to him by his just rule over his kingdom and in a celestial car brilliant like the sun, he goes to heaven and enjoys heavenly pleasures in the company of Indra (king of gods).

47. In times of adversity, a Brāhmaṇa should take to the commercial profession and should surmount the difficult times by selling non-prohibited articles.<sup>1</sup> If, however, he still gets into difficulties (by suffering a loss in his business), he should make his way through that emergency by taking to the sword,<sup>2</sup> but he should never resort to a dog's way of life (by undertaking lower jobs).

48. During distress, a Kṣātriya should adopt the profession of a Vaiśya or live by hunting or should take to livelihood of a Brāhmaṇa (by accepting a teaching job, but he should never take to the life of a Śūdra.

49. Under adverse circumstance, a person from Vaiśya community should follow the vocations of a Śūdra-artisans like mat-weaving. But once he had overcome the difficulty, he should not hanker after the censurable calling (recommended by Dharmaśāstra to the lower strata of society).

50. A house-holder should according to his financial position, look upon gods, sages, manes and other beings as my embodiments and every day worship them by offering oblations in sacrificial fires uttering the word svāhā at every oblation to a particular deity in the case of gods. Study and recitation of Vedas (technically known as Brahma-yajña, meant for sages), oblations (of water known as Tarpaṇa and Śrāddha for departed ancestors) accompanied with the pronunciations of the word svadhā, offering of food (bali) to living beings and serving of food to guests (known as Manuṣya-yajña.

1. A Brāhmaṇa is not allowed to sell articles like salt, wine etc. (by Dharmaśāstra)—ŚR. To this list EK adds—Ghee, oil, sesamum, cotton (EB. 17.457).

2. Gautamasmṛti regards a soldier's profession superior to that of a merchant but soldierly profession involves himsā (injury to life). Hence the Lord's preference to the Vaiśya way of life—ŚR.

51. Without causing any hardship to his dependants (wife, children, servant, etc.), one should perform sacrifices as per proper rites and formalities with the wealth got without any efforts (as by legal inheritance) or with money earned by following one's profession or with the wealth obtained by fair means.

52. One should not entertain attachment to the members of one's family. Even though one be a householder, he should not be negligent in his devotion to God. An intelligent person should realize that the unseen enjoyments in heaven (promised by the Pūrva Mīmāṃsā) are as momentary as the visible world.

53. Companionship and association with one's sons, wives, kith and kin is momentary like the get-together of travellers (for drinking water-). With the change of one's body (in the next birth), they part company like a dream that disappears with the sleep.

54. Having thus realized the truth after deep thought, and staying in his house (unconcerned) like a stranger or a guest, he, being devoid of the notion of 'I-ness' and 'mine-ness' (with reference to his body, relatives and property) is not bound by (and attached to) his household property and leads the life of one liberated while alive.<sup>1</sup>

55. Having propitiated me alone through devout worship in the form of performance of duties prescribed for a house-holder, my devotee may continue to stay at home (as a house-holder) or live in a forest as an anchorite (Vānaprastha) or become a recluse (sannyāsin) if he has got children (and a continuation of his race).

56. But he whose heart is deeply attached to his household and eagerly pines for getting money and children and is obsessed with sex, is a man of poor understanding. Such a fool is bound with the notions of 'I-ness' and 'mine-ness'

57. "Alas! My parents are aged. My wife and my young children—all of them have no protector without me!

1. SD. 'free from desires and attachment'

EK. 'Is automatically liberated even as a householder' VR, VJ, BP read yukta for mukta and interpret as 'one who has concentrated his mind in ~~one~~ (samāhita).

How can those helpless and miserable persons live without me?"

58. With his heart thus overwhelmed and distracted with anxious attachment to his house, this dull-witted fellow remains dissatisfied and dies while brooding over them and enters the blinding darkness (of hell after death).

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

Duties of Hermits (Vānaprastha) and Sannyāsins

1. A person desirous of entering the Vānaprastha (the third stage of) life should either entrust his wife to the care of his sons or take her with him. He should spend the third quarter of his life (upto the age of seventyfive years) in a forest.

2. He should live on bulbous and other roots, fruits which are regarded as pure and which grow in forests. For clothing he should wear bark-garments, mats of grass and leaves and deer-skins.

3. He should allow to grow the hair on his head, beard, nails and dirt (dust) on his body. He should not brush his teeth. He should dip his body in water (like a pestle, without cleansing his body) three times (morning, noon and evening) a day and sleep on bare ground (without using even grass or leaves to cover it).

4. In summer, he should perform (what is technically known as) Pañcāgni sādhanā i.e. exposure of the body to the heat of fire from four quarters while the fifth fire, viz. the sun is scorching from the sky. In the rainy-season, he should observe the vow of Abhrāvakāśa i.e. drenching the body in heavy showers and in the winter he should stay immersed in the water upto the neck (and observe the udaka-vāsa vrata). He should perform penance following the above way of life.

5. He may eat what is baked on the fire or fruits, etc. ripened in course of time. He may subsist on what is pounded in a mortar or crushed with a stone or powdered with his teeth as mortar and pestle.

6. He should, with his own effort, procure whatever is required for his subsistence. Though he has full knowledge of his environments, of the season, and of his own capacity, he should not use it for storing (food, fruits, etc.) for some other occasion.<sup>1</sup> Nor should he accept what is offered by others.

7. He should perform the prescribed periodic sacrificial duties with oblations of the forest produce and Puroḍāśa (prepared out of them). But under no circumstances should a Vānaprastha worship me with animal sacrifices as laid down in the Śruti texts.

8. Maintenance of sacred fire and regular offering of oblations to it (Agnihotra), performance of half-monthly sacrifices on the New Moon day (Darśa) and the Full Moon Day (Pūrṇamāsa) and the seasonal sacrifices performed at the beginning of the months of Kārttika, Phālguna and Āsāḍha (which mark the beginnings of the main seasons in India), have been prescribed for a Vānaprastha by Vedic teachers.

9. The sage who becomes spread over by a web of (protruding) veins (i.e. is reduced to a skeleton for want of flesh) by performing penance as described above, propitiates me who am the embodiment of Tapas (austerities) and comes to me passing through the region of sages (via Mahar-loka, etc.)

10. Who else can be more foolish than the person who dissipates for fulfilling flimsy desires such as great penance performed with enormous troubles and capable of securing him Mokṣa?

11*. When, shaking with decrepitude, he becomes incapable of observing the duties prescribed (for the Vānaprastha

1. labdhe naye naye'nnādye purāṇam tu parityajet/

—BH.P.VII. 12. 19.

* ŚR. explains: A Vānaprastha who continues to perform penance to the end of his life attains Mokṣa. If at the end of the Vānaprastha period, stage), he should withdraw within himself the three sacred fires (viz. Āhavanīya, Gārhapatya and Dakṣiṇa which he is maintaining for Agnihotra) and concentrating his mind on me, he should enter fire.

12. When a genuine feeling of renunciation is generated towards the worlds or to even higher blissful regions obtained by merits) as no better than the hell (full of tortures and miseries), he should withdraw (as per procedure laid down in śāstras) all the (three) fires within himself and enter the order of sannyāsins.

13. Having worshipped me as per Śāstric instructions,<sup>1</sup> and having gifted everything what one has to the sacrificial priest, one should deposit the three sacred fires within his own Inner Self (antar-yāmin) and he should enter the order of sannyāsa completely free from any longings.

14. In the way of a Brāhmaṇa who is bent on renouncing the world as a sannyāsin, gods create impediments in the form of his wife and others (for dissuading him from sannyāsa), as they are afraid that he would supersede them, and attain Brahman.

15. If a sage entering the order of sannyāsa requires any clothing other than his loin-cloth (kaupīna), he should take only that much as is sufficient to cover his private parts. Except in case of emergency or critical plight (such as serious illness), he should not have anything that he has renounced (at the time of becoming a sannyāsin) with the exception of a staff (symbolic of his being a sannyāsin and a water-jar (made of gourd) .

16. A sannyāsin should place his foot forward only when the ground is purified by eyes (that is, it is scanned and found free from living beings and thus there would be no violence to life in stepping over that spot). He should drink water puri-renunciation is generated in his mind (even dimly), he is eligible to become a Sannyāsin. But in case of premature incapacitation (if he becomes incapable of observing his vows before the end of that stage), the above self consignment to fire is recommended.

1. A Yānaprastha should perform the Prājāpatya sacrifice and also eight śrāddhas before becoming a Sannyāsin—ŚR.

fied by straining it with a piece of cloth. He should utter a word after convincing himself that what is expressed thereby is true. He should adopt a course of conduct according to the dictates of his conscience.

17. Silence,<sup>1</sup> renunciation of acts (for fulfilling one's desires) and the control of breath, these are the internal controls of speech, body and mind. Dear Uddhava ! He who does not have these controls, is no Sannyāsin as one does not make a real sannyāsin with a bamboo-staff.

18. Avoiding the houses of the reproachful, one may go for alms to the houses of all the four Varṇas<sup>2</sup> (castes) among the Brāhmaṇas.<sup>3</sup> He should go to seven houses without giving pre-intimation and should be content with whatever one gets.<sup>4</sup>

19. He should go to some reservoir of water (a lake, a river, etc.) outside the village or town. After sipping water (as Ācamana) in silence, he should sanctify the food (sprinkling it with a few drops of water charged with twelve Praṇavas, should divide that food in four parts (alotting them to Brahmā, Viṣṇu, the Sun-god and living beings and immersing Viṣṇu's part into water and placing the one for living beings on the ground), he should finish the remaining holy food. (He should not store anything for the future).

1. EK.: Repetition of God's name of OM constitutes the control of speech. Breath control is the danḍa of the body and concentration in the Brahman is the control of the mind. —EB. 18.97-102.

2. EK. clarifies: Before the advent of the Kali age, this was the rule. But in the Kali age, Brāhmaṇas follow different non-Brāhmaṇa professions and vocations. So we have all the four Varṇas in the Brāhmaṇa community itself. In the Kali age a sannyāsi should limit himself to the houses of Brāhmaṇas only. The exception of a reproachful Brāhmaṇa is of course binding. —EB. 11. 104-113.

3. JG and VC. classify Brāhmaṇas as follows:

- (1) Those who live on gifts (dāna) from others.
- (2) Teachers of Vedas and Śāstras.
- (3) Those who maintain themselves on fees received at sacrifices.
- (4) Those who live upon foodgrains gleaned from fields and market places.

Thus the mode of living (vyttibheda) is the criterion in deciding the Varṇas among Brāhmaṇas.

4. VR. advises that a recluse should beg in the houses of Brahmin—Brāhmaṇas first and then Brahmin-Kṣātrīyas, etc.

20. With his senses and mind under control and perfectly unattached, he should wander all over the world without a companion, indulging in the recreation and bliss of his soul. Engrossed in his Self, he should view all with an equal eye.<sup>1</sup>

21. Staying in a lonely yet safe place and with his mind purified by devotion to me, the sage should deeply meditate upon the one-ness of the self and its identity with me.<sup>2</sup>

22. By application of his spiritual knowledge he should investigate into the nature of the bondage and liberation of the soul (and understand that) distraction of senses (to their objects of enjoyment) is the bondage and subjugation and control of senses is the Mokṣa.

23. Therefore, controlling the group of six enemies (i.e. passions like lust, anger, avarice, etc. or five senses plus the inner sense—the mind) the sage should renounce trifling pleasures of senses, enjoying thereby the great bliss within his Self. While contemplating on me, the sage should carry on his pilgrimage on the earth.

24. He should travel over the earth full of sacred lands, holy rivers, mountains, forests<sup>3</sup> and hermitages, entering cities, villages, cowherd settlements and caravansaries just for begging alms.

25. A Sannyāsin should frequently visit the hermitages of the Vānaprasthas. For (the food he gets is prepared out of foodgrains gleaned from cornfields and market places and) by such food from gleaned food-grains, his mind becomes quickly purified and free from delusion, and he attains liberation.

26. He should not look upon this (sweet food or other objects of pleasure) as real, for whatever is visible is bound to perish. With his mind detached to objects in this world or in the next, he should cease to work for gaining them (here or hereafter).

1. VR.: He should see that both sentient and non-sentient are a part of the body of the Lord.

2. VJ.: The sage should contemplate that the Lord is different from Jīva and that I am the Supreme Being established by the Veda (... Śrutya mayā siddham ātmānam ekam mukhyaṁ cintayed abhedena jīvenaikyam na cintayet) —

3. EK. gives a suggestive list of holy places.

27. He should, by logical reasoning, realize that all this world and this body constituted of mind, speech and vital breath is nothing but Māyā (Illusion) superimposed on the Ātman. He should renounce it and stabilising himself in his blissful self, he should never remember the world (or samsāra).

28. My devotee who is established in spiritual knowledge, unattached to the world and does not long for anything (including Mokṣa) should renounce not only the duties (and attachment) pertaining to his āśrama but even its external distinguishing marks. He should go on in his life without being governed by the Śāstric rules in the matter—(Not that he should give up purity, bathing, etc. but he should not be a subject to Śāstric injunctions).

29. Such a person, though full of wisdom, should behave like a child (with no sense of respect or disrespect). Though well-versed in a skill, he should assume dullness. Though deeply learned, he should show himself as insane (as he has to please nobody). Though master of Vedas (and faithful to their teaching) he should behave like an animal.

30. He should not take interest in discussion about Vedic interpretation (whether pertaining to sacrifices or rules of conduct). Nor should he be a non-believer in the Vedas or one expert in Logical reasoning. He should not be a participant in fruitless discussion.

31. Full of wisdom and fortitude, he should not be afraid of anybody. Nor should he frighten away the people. He should forbear harsh words nor should he insult anyone. For the sake of his body, he should not entertain enmity with anyone.

32. For the Supreme Soul is but one. He abides in all living beings as well as in one's own-self, just as the Moon (only one entity) is reflected in different vessels full of water. All beings even from the point of physical bodies are one, as they are made of the same gross elements. (Hence there is no propriety in cherishing enmity with anyone).

33. He should not become despondent, if sometimes he did not get alms; nor should he feel elated if he gets food in time. Full of fortitude, he should realize that both these (getting alms or failing to get it) are in the hands of the Providence.

34. (This does not mean that one should not go out for alms). He should try to get alms for subsistence; for it is proper and essential to sustain life. It is by sustaining life that truth can be investigated. And it is by realization of the truth, that one gets Liberation from Samsāra.

35. A sage should accept whatever food comes to his lot by the will of the Providence—whether it be excellent or otherwise; similarly, he must accept whatever clothes and beds as may be offered to him.

36. Just as I carry on my activities as a sport, a man of spiritual wisdom should practise his habits of cleanliness, ācamana (sipping of water before taking food, etc.), bath, and not in compliance of the rule of the Dharmaśāstra. He should behave similarly in other matters.

37. He has no sense of difference in him any longer. Whatever such sense there might have been, has disappeared since his realization of me. Occasionally such a sense of perception may appear till the fall of his body, but thereafter he merges in me.

38. A person who is self-controlled and has become disgusted with objects of pleasure which (he knows) end up in misery, but is not enlightened in duties leading to my realization, should approach a sage as his preceptor.

39. Full of devout faith and with malice towards none, he should devotedly serve his teacher respecting him as if he is myself, till he realizes his Brahman.

40. But he who has not controlled the group of six enemies (viz. six passions like lust, anger, avarice, etc. Or his five senses and the mind) and whose mind the controller of his senses, has been deeply attached to objects of pleasures, is devoid of spiritual knowledge and dispassion and only makes his livelihood by the triple staff (the symbol of being a Sannyāsin).

41. Such a person is a violator of Dharma. He deceives gods (by denying them their sacrificial oblations which he would have offered as a house-holder), himself (by being deprived of household-comforts he would have got, had he not been a Sannyāsin), me who abide in him (as he fails to realize me). His sins are not completely consumed and he loses his world as well as the next.

42. The essence of the righteous course of conduct of a recluse (Sannyāsin) is self-control and abstinence from violence; that of the Vānaprastha (the renouncer who stays in a forest) consists of performance of austerities (as prescribed for this stage of life in Śāstras) and (attainment of) spiritual knowledge that of a householder constitutes of the protection of beings, and performance of pañca-mahā-yajñas (offering of oblations to gods and ancestors, offering of food to preceptors, guests etc.) while that of a twice-born (a boy who has taken a new spiritual birth by the investiture of the sacred thread and has become a) Brahmacārin—a celibate student—is the service of his preceptor.

43. Celibacy (i.e. abstinence from contacts with one's wife on nights prohibited by Śāstras), penance, (mental and bodily) purity, contentment, friendliness to all creatures constitute the Dharma (the pious duties) of a householder—(Please note that a householder) who goes to his wife on the days (sanctioned by scriptures) is also a celibate person, while devotion to me is a sacred duty common to all (irrespective of their particular Āśrama).

44. A person who worships me by observing the pious duties (laid down for his particular Varṇa and Āśrama) as mentioned above without any expectation in return or (does not deviate to some other god or to some other purpose), and who sees me as abiding (as an antaryāmin) in all beings, attains to the (highest type of) Devotion<sup>1</sup> to me in a short while.

45. It is by such unswerving (life-long) devotion, O Uddhava, that the devotee attains to me, the Supreme Ruler of all worlds, the source of the creation and destruction of all, and hence the cause of everything, the Brahman<sup>1</sup> himself (or the creator of the Vedas).

46. A person whose heart is purified by observing the pious duties prescribed for his particular social class (Varṇa) and stage in life (Āśrama) and who has understood my nature, attains both spiritual wisdom and my direct realization reaches me in a short time.

47. This is the righteous course of conduct of persons belonging to the four social classes (Varṇa) and their four stages of life (Āśrama). When this very course is reinforced by devotion to me, it becomes the supremely efficacious means of attaining the summum bonum (Mokṣa).

48. I have thus explained to you, O good Uddhava, whatever you had enquired of me. It is in this way that my devotee, while following the path of righteous duties (specified for his particular Varṇa and Āśrama), attains to me who am the Supreme (Brahman).

CHAPTER NINETEEN

Exposition of Spiritual Knowledge, its Realization and Yogic Disciplines

The Lord said :

1.* He who is endowed with Śāstric learning leading to direct Ātmic realization and has not to depend on logical reasoning, should understand that this world of difference (as well

1. ŚR.: The presiding Deity in Vaikuṇṭha. The devotee attains the Mukti called Sāṃīpya (vicinity to the Lord)

EK.: The devotee attains to the fourth Bhakti called the Supreme Devotion, full of the highest bliss in which God and the devotee become one.

—EB. 18. 325-332.

* EK: When bodily activities ego-lessly take place and one is absorbed in spiritual bliss without enjoying sense-objects and one's knowledge is intuitive (not depending on logical reasoning) that is the stage of 'self-realization'. In that stage, knowledge and means to it, as well as contemplation—everything is 'lost', as there is neither bondage nor liberation as both of these are illusory products of Māyā.

as the dialectic process of negating it) is the illusion caused by my Māyā and should ultimately consign this knowledge unto me (This is termed as Vidvat-sannyāsa).

2. None else but I am the beloved to the spiritually enlightened person. Only I am accepted (by him) as his objective (goal to be achieved) as well as the means of achieving it. I am the Sparga (i. e. worldly prosperity) as well as the Mokṣa (the state of final emancipation from Saṁsāra), to him. Nothing except me is dear to him.

3. Persons who are endowed with spiritual knowledge i. e. know the distinctness of Ātman from the body and Prakṛti and realization of the self (i. e. knowledge that Paramātman is both the goal and means to attain to Him) are able to cognise (and reach) my highest state. Such a knower bears me up with his spiritual enlightenment and hence he is the beloved-most to me.

4. The stage of (spiritual) perfection attained by even a single particle (or ray) of knowledge cannot be brought about and reached by performance of austerities, visits to sacred places and ablutions in holy waters, muttering of mantras, charities (e. g. donations of cows, gold, land), prescribed purificatory acts (according to Śāstras).

5. Hence, O Uddhava, securing viññāna i. e. the bliss of one-ness with Paramātman by means of jñāna i. e. realization of the spiritual knowledge (of the identity of the jīva and Paramātman and being endowed with the knowledge (Jñāna) and its realization (Viññāna, mentioned above), worship me devoutly.

6. It is reported that having worshipped me by means of the sacrifice in the form of Jñāna and Viññāna (as explained above) in their heart, sages of yore have attained to spiritual perfection (i. e. absorption in me).

7.* The three-fold modification<sup>1</sup> (viz. those resulting from * VJ. slightly differs:

Birth and other states of the body are transferred from the body to the Jīva (due to ignorance), though he is really unconcerned with them. The Lord being non-physical is not affected by them at all. Liberation is attainment to the Lord after casting off this psycho-physical organism.

ato nitya-nirduḥkhānandānubhāvāya mama prāptir eva muktih/

1. viz. the birth, existence and death of the body—EK.

the mind or self, caused by fate and by elements and living beings of which you are the substratum, is nothing but illusion (Māyā). It did not exist in the beginning or at the end but appears in the middle (just as the misapprehension of a serpent or a garland, in stead of the reality of its being a rope, does not exist before it is misapprehended or after the clarification of the reality). When birth and other states (viz. existence, growth, transformation, decay and death) affect this body of yours, what do they affect you who are the basis of these modifications. For (as in the case of misapprehension of a rope as a serpent) what exists before the beginning of the misapprehension (viz. the reality of a rope) and what remains after it (is cleared up viz. the existence of a rope) does exist in the middle also. (Just as the rope, the substratum of these changes, remains the same, unaffected by them, you are not touched by the six changes in the body from birth to death).

Uddhava said :

8. O Lord of the universe ! Be pleased to elucidate to me, in details, this ancient, extremely pure (and hallowing) traditional (convincing, spiritual) wisdom accompanied with renunciation and intuitive knowledge, in such a way (as will dispel my ignorance). O embodiment of the universe ! Please explain to me your path of Devotion (Bhakti-Yoga) which is sought after by the great (gods like Brahmā).

9. O Lord ! To a person troubled on all the sides by threefold afflictions (viz. those caused by fate, through bodily or mental disorders and caused by other beings or elements) and tormented with the scorching miseries in this terrible path of Samsāra, I do not see any other place of shelter except the umbrella of your pair of feet which (in addition to affording cool shade-protection from the miseries of Samsāra) shower nectar (of spiritual bliss)<sup>1</sup> on all sides.

10. O Supremely glorious Lord ! Be gracious to lift me up who have fallen in the dark abysmal hole of Samsāra wherein bitten by the serpent of Death, this person (I myself) is extremely thirsting after low pleasures of senses. Be kind to sprikle me on all sides with your words leading me to the liberation from Samsāra.

1. Bliss of liberation from Samsāra—VR.

The glorious Lord said :

11. Formerly, King Yudhiṣṭhira (who was friendly to all beings) asked this very question to Bhīṣma, the foremost among the observers of the path of righteousness, while all of us were in the audience.

12. After the termination of the internecine war among the Bharata clans (at Kurukṣetra), he was greatly perturbed and despondent on account of the death of his friends and relatives (in that war). After listening to a number of discourses on various points of Dharma (religion and righteousness), he asked him about the paths of righteousness leading to the emancipation from Samsāra.

13. I shall now recount to you those discourses which were full of precepts on spiritual wisdom, dispassion, Ātmic realization, faith and devotion, as I heard them from the lips of Bhīṣma.

14. It is my (considered) decision that that is the real jñāna (spiritual wisdom) by which one can perceive in all beings, the (twenty-eight principles consisting of the) nine (viz. Prakṛti, Puruṣa, mahat, ahamkāra and the five tan-mātrās or subtle elements), the eleven (the five cognitive senses, five conative organs and the internal-organs or the mind), the five (gross elements viz. the earth, water, fire, air and the ether) and the three (guṇas viz. Sattva, Rajas and Tamas) and also that the Paramātmān as permeating these all.

15. This is definitely the (real) viññāna—that a person does not now perceive (as he did in the initial stage) the plurality of principles as being real or that the many principles are permeated (through and through) by the one Para-Brahman but that Para-Brahman is the only Reality (and the other principles, etc. are unreal). He should also see clearly that the origination, continuation and destruction are concerned only with entities which are constituted by three guṇas (and as such they are transitory and unreal).

16.* That alone is the Real Existence which continues to exist at the beginning, in the end as well as in the middle and persists while one evolute leads to another and remains unabsorbed in the process of involution (as the residue at the end).

17. The Vedic text, direct perception, tradition and inference—these are the four (authoritative) tools of knowledge. As plurality of phenomenal world is not supported by any of these authoritative instruments of knowledge, a (spiritually) wise person gives up the concept of plurality.

18. As all sacrificial and ritualistic acts (which lead to heavenly life) are the effects and hence subject to change (and transient), a wise person should perceive that all the eventual fruits of such acts including the position of god Brahmā are inauspicious and transitory like the visible ones.

19. I have already expounded to you the path of Devotion, as you cherished a liking for it. I shall expound to you once again the most effective method of the Bhakti-Yoga, O sinless Uddhava.

20-23. Sincere faith in the nectar-like stories about me, constant rehearsal of my glories, unswerving faith and devotion to my worship, singing hymns in my praise, deep reverence in rendering service to me, to prostrate before (touching the ground with eight parts of the body) for bowing me, rendering greater devotion to the worship of my devotees, the perception of my presence in all beings, directing all bodily activities for dedication to my service, to sing exclusively of my glories, to resign the mind to me, renunciation of all desires, to give up for my sake wealth, enjoyments and pleasures (if they come in the way of devotion to me) and dedication to me of the performances of sacrifices, charitable acts (donations, etc.), offering of oblations, repetition of mantras, observance of vows and austere penance done for my sake—all these (definitely) lead to Devotion.

* VR: The true knowledge recognises the fact that existence is the essential nature of Ātman as he does not change with the change of the body (as a god, a man or a sub-human being) and remains at the end (even in Mokṣa where physical bodies do not exist).

24. O Uddhava ! It is by performing such acts (of devotion) by persons who have dedicated themselves to me completely, that real Devotion to me is engendered in them. What other objective in life (of such a devotee) remains unaccomplished ?

25. When the mind, full of the attribute called Sattva and hence perfectly tranquil, is resigned to me, the person (concerned) becomes endowed with righteous spiritual wisdom reinforced with dispassion and reaches the state of Īśvara.

26. When (on the contrary) the mind is dedicated to things other than I (viz. persons and objects in Saṁsāra), it goes astray with senses and getting stained by Rajas and attached to asa (Tamas or transitory objects) it becomes the reverse of above (i. e. becomes unrighteous, ignorant, full of passions, etc.)

27. That (act or course of conduct) which promotes devotion unto me is the real Dharma (righteousness); the perception of the one-ness of the Soul is spiritual wisdom; non-attachment to guṇas (the objects of senses) is the real dispassion; and possession of mystic powers (such as atomization, magnification, levitation and others) is the state of Īśvara.

Uddhava said :

28. O vanquisher of enemies ! What are the different observances which are laid down as Yama (self-control) and what varieties of vows are prescribed as Niyama ? What is the nature of Śama (spiritual quiescence) ? What constitutes Dama (Self-restraint) ? O Kṛṣṇa, what is the definition of forbearance (titikṣā) and that of moral courage ? O Lord !

29. What is the nature of charity and of penance ? What is real bravery ? What is truthfulness ? What constitutes Rta (moral or divine Law) ? What is real renunciation ? What wealth is desirable ? What is a sacrificial performance and what is the nature of Dakṣiṇā (sacrificial fees to be offered to sacrificers) ?

30. Where lies the real strength of manhood, O Lord of Lakṣmī ? What is the real fortune or gain ? O Keśava, what is the Supreme Love and the highest type of modesty (Hṛī) ?

What is the real adornment? What is the nature of pleasure and pain?

31. Who is (really) a learned man and who is a fool? What is the (correct) path? What amount to going astray? What is Svarga (celestial world) and what is a hell? Who should be regarded as a kinsman and what is a home?

32. Who is rich and who is poor? Who is pitiable and who is the master (controller)? Be pleased to elucidate to me the contraries of these, O Protector of the righteous.

The Glorious Lord replied:

33-35. Abstention from causing any injury to others, to speak to the point what is true yet agreeable, to abstain (even mentally) from appropriating what belongs to others, absolute-non-attachment, modesty, abstention for accumulating or storing anything in one's possessions, faith in Śāstras celibacy, firmness in Dharma, forbearance, fearlessness (or to afford protection from fear) (These twelve constitute the yama observances). Purification of the mind as well as of the body, repetition of a mantra or God's name, austerities, offering oblations (to gods) deep faith and reverence for Śāstras, hospitality, performance of my worship, visit to sacred places, working for the good of others, contentment and rendering service to preceptors. These are Yamas and Niyamas, twelve each in number, prescribed for the followers of the path of Pravṛtti and Nivṛtti. If these are observed, they confer prosperity or emancipation (from Samsāra) as desired by the observers.

36. Śama is devoutly and firmly establishing one's intellect (or mind) in me; Dama is the control of senses; Titikṣā is to bear up quietly with afflictions; Fortitude (Dhṛti) is the complete control over the palate and the sex.

37. The highest type of charity is abstention from harming other creatures; austerities consist of abstention from desires (of enjoyment); heroism lies in conquering one's natural cravings and to look upon all as equal i.e. one-ness (i.e. Brahman) everywhere is truthfulness.

38. Wise persons say that sweet yet truthful speech is the Rta and non-attachment to one's actions is cleanliness and (not mere bodily cleanliness); renunciation is giving up the notions of 'I' and 'mine' as well as desires of fruit here and hereafter ( and not merely deserting one's home ).

39. Righteousness or taking to the path of God-realization is the desirable wealth (and not money, cattle and prosperity). I am the sacrifice (and should be performed with this knowledge and not as a ritualistic performance). Spiritual enlightenment is real sacrificial fees Dakṣiṇā and not gold and other things offered as such); the real strength is the control of breath ( which leads to the control of the mind ).

40. Fortune is my divine state having the six attributes (such as rulership, piety, glory, affluence and others and not mere favour of luck ); The highest gain is ( sincere ) devotion to me; learning consists in perceiving the underlying one-ness of the Ātman (and not mere erudition) and Hṛi is the abstaining (with repulsion) from doing a prohibited act (and not the sense of shame after committing it).

41. Śrī (Adornment) lies in good qualities such as absence of desires (and not gold crown and other ornaments); happiness consists in transcending the sense of both pleasure and pain (and not mere enjoyment); Misery lies in craving after pleasures from fulfilment of desires (and not scorching from fire, etc.). He who knows the path of liberation from the bondage of Samsāra (or has the true knowledge of the nature of the bondage and emancipation) is a real Paṇḍita.

42. He is a fool who conceives that his body and its belongings constitute the Ātman. It is proclaimed that the true path is that which leads (the follower) to me (God-realization and the wrong path is the path of Samsāra (Pravṛtti Mārga) which causes the distraction of the mind. Svarga is the predominance of the Sattva guṇa.

43. Hell connotes the ascendancy and sway of the Tamoguṇa, O friend Uddhava ! The (spiritual) preceptor is one's (real) relative and that is me only. The human body is the house and one who is richly endowed with excellent qualities is a wealthy person.

44. He who is discontented is a destitute and he who has no control over his senses is a pitiable wretch. He is the master whose mind is not attached to guṇas (objects of senses), while the reverse of this (i.e. the slave) is a person who is addicted to the pleasure of senses.

45. In this way, O Uddhava, all your queries have been clearly explained by me. What more need is there for a lengthy discussion ? The following is the criterion of deciding what is good and evil : It is evil to pry into the weak points and merits (of a thing) while the habit not to think of them both is good.

CHAPTER TWENTY

Elucidation of Karma, Jñāna and Bhakti Yogas

Uddhava said :

1. Injunctions and interdictions regarding specific acts are ordained by the Vedas which are commandments of you, the Supreme Ruler. And they consider the goodness and badness of acts with reference to the good and evil consequence of those acts. (This being the case, how is it that you say that it is evil to pry into the weak points and merits, while the habit not to think of them both is good (Supra 19.45)).

2. It is the Veda which distinguishes between the order of merit of different castes or social classes and stages in life, of the merit-based gradation of persons born from the marriage of the high caste man with a lower caste woman and the lowcaste man with a higher caste woman. It points out the merits or otherwise of the material, venue, age and season (proper for performing sacrifices) as well as (the acts which lead to) heaven and hell.

3. How is it possible to follow your word (the Veda) which is characterised by expressions laying down injunctions and interdictions and which leads men to liberation from Samsāra, unless one has the power of discrimination between the good and the evil.

4. The Veda, a form of your word, serves as an eye to manes, gods and human beings, O Supreme Ruler. It helps them to get insight into the 'unseen' (i.e. the heavenly region or liberation from Samsāra) and the end and means of attaining them.

5. It is through the Veda, your own command, that the notion of distinction between the good and the evil, is derived and not independently by anybody's individual opinion or by nature. When that distinction (recognised by the Veda) is refuted by the Veda itself that (naturally) causes bewilderment.

The Lord replied :

6. With the desire of securing final beatitude (Mokṣa) to beings, three types of Yogas (courses of disciplines) have been expounded by me. They are the path of knowledge, path of (desireless) Action and path of Devotion (and they correspond to the Brahma, Karma and Upāsana sections of the Śruti).

In no part of the Veda, any other means or path of liberation has been propounded.

7. Out of these paths the path of knowledge is meant for those recluses who are nauseated with ritualistic acts (and the ephemeral nature of the promised happiness accruing from them) and consequently have given up such Karmas. But the Path of Karma is prescribed for those who hanker after the fulfilment of their desires and are not disenchanted with such (ritualistic) acts.

8. The path of Devotion is conducive to the attainment of Liberation in the case of a person who by a lucky chance has come to cherish a devout faith in my stories (and in the efficacy of my name) etc. and who is neither disgusted with nor deeply attached to the performance of (prescribed religious) acts.<sup>1</sup>

One should continue to perform (prescribed religious) actions till he does not feel disgusted.

9. A person should continue to perform the religious acts prescribed for his particular caste and stage of life till he

1. VJ. believes that gods belong to this category.

(being disenchanted with the futility of the promised fruits from those Karmas) feels disgusted with them or till devout faith in listening to my stories (meditating upon me and such other form of Bhakti) is not engendered in him<sup>1</sup>

10. O Uddhava! A person who follows the religious duties (prescribed for his particular class (Vaṇa) and stage in life (Āśrama) and worships me through performance of sacrifices without cherishing any interest in the fruits thereof does not go to the heaven or hell unless he commits an act prohibited in Śāstras (either by commission or by omission).

11. If, while existing in this body (or the world), a person strictly follows the course of religious duties prescribed for him (i.e. for his particular caste and stage in life) and leads a sinless, pure life, he naturally gains pure knowledge or if he is lucky enough may find devotion engendered in him (as Devotion is superior to knowledge).

12-13. Both the inhabitants of the celestial world and the denizens of hell desire to be born (as human beings) in this world, as this life leads to the attainment of Liberation (from Samsāra) by means of the paths of knowledge and Bhakti which is not possible in the special bodies with which the heavenly or hellish beings are vested. A wise man should not long for heaven just as he would not desire for the infernal region. Nor should he desire to be reborn in this world, as it is due to the attachment to one's body that he blunders (and does not attain liberation).

14. Realizing this (speciality of the human body) and being aware that though this human body is capable of attaining Mokṣa (Liberation from Samsāra) it is after all mortal, a person should not be negligent and exert for attaining Liberation (lit. non-return to this world) before he is overtaken by death.

15. The bird (the individual soul) who has built its nest on the tree (viz. this body) which is being mercilessly hacked down by persons cruel like the god of death, feels happy in abandoning its nest and the tree, if it is not attached to it.

1. VJ. thinks that the Path of Karma is expounded in this verse as the performance of Karmas is a must till spiritual knowledge dawns or devotion is engendered in the mind. It is the Karma-path which purifies the mind and renders one eligible for the path of knowledge or devotion.

16. Likewise a person, knowing that life is being mercilessly hacked by day and night and trembling with fear discards all attachments and desires. And after realizing the Supreme Self he settles in the state of perfect bliss.

17. He is certainly a perpetrator of spiritual suicide who would not (even) attempt to get over the sea of worldly existence (Samsāra) even when he, by a lucky chance (through the grace of God), has easily obtained this excellent boat in the form of the human body which, the main spring of all good fruits<sup>1</sup>, is extremely difficult to procure and which is not only equipped with all accessories (useful for all purposes) and piloted by the helmsman in the form of the spiritual preceptor, but also is propelled by me like a driving favourable wind.

18. When, on foreseeing (the evil consequences of attachment to the fruits of Karmas) a person gets disgusted with actions prescribed in the Śāstras (and meant for obtaining some ulterior motive as its fruit) and thus becomes unattached and indifferent (to the fruits of the Karmas), he should control his senses and, by constant practice of directing his mind to contemplation on the Self (Ātman), steady it in meditation (on the Self).

19. If, the mind, while being made to concentrate steadily (on the Self) begins to stray (towards objects of sense) immediately and thus becomes unsteady, the Yogī should be vigilant and try to bring it back under control by conciliatory method (by making some slight allowance to its inclination).

20. Exercising control over breath and subduing one's senses, he should not remain negligent about the vagrancy of his mind but watch it vigilantly and with his reasoning capacity reinforced with Sattva, he should bring his mind under control.

21. Like unto a horseman breaking an unmanageable horse by allowing its inclination in the beginning (and tightly bridling it just at the proper moment), the established method of repeatedly withdrawing the mind (by the above-mentioned conciliatory process) by knowing its natural inclination, is regarded to be (the proper path to) the highest Yoga.

1. The human body is called Ādya as it alone is eligible to realize Brahman and a being can attain god-head through this body only out of eighty four lakhs of species—EK.

22. With a thorough understanding of the (fundamental) principle of the Sāṅkhya system (of thought), he should contemplate the chain of causation in the evolution (from Prakṛti creating the Mahat—subtle elements—gross elements—his own body) and in the involution (the reverse of the above process from his body to Prakṛti) of all objects, till his mind becomes serene.

23. The mind of a person who is disgusted with the world (due to pondering over the evolution and involution given in the Sāṅkhya philosophy) and becomes renunciated and contemplates repeatedly the teaching of his preceptor, becomes free from all evil thoughts (such as identification of the body with the Self.)

24. It is by means of the path of Yoga like Yama (self-control) and others and by the knowledge gained by thorough investigation of the ultimate principles (viz. Sat—being and a-sat non-being) or<sup>1</sup> by worship and propitiation of my images or symbolic representations, that the mind should be made to contemplate on me, the Supreme Soul which is the only object.

25. If (per chance) a Yogi happens to commit an iniquity through mistake or lapse on his part, he should burn down that sin by the process of Yoga (like meditation of the Lord, repeating the Lord's name, etc.) but should never resort to other expiatory rites.

26. Firm devotion and strict observance of duties prescribed for one's own class in society (Varṇa) and stage in life (Āśrama) has been called a merit (the opposite of which is obviously demerit or sin). An action—an inborn tendency of living beings to do something—is impure by nature. A distinction between merit and demerit (or virtue and fault) has been drawn (with a view to make people avoid the wrong course). A restriction has been imposed on actions (Karmas), as it is intended that all attachment (to worldly objects) be given up.

27. When devout faith in my stories is awakened, a person becomes disenchanted with all the acts (religious rites, sacrifices, etc. enjoined by the Vedas). He knows that they (i.e. the rewards promised as a result of those karmas) are full of miseries, but is not able to renounce them (due to a wavering state of mind).

28. Under such circumstances, he should cherish faith in me and with a firm resolution should worship me, full of love and devotion. Even while he continues to enjoy objects of pleasure (or has a longing for them), he should damn them as sources of misery.

29. A sage who constantly worships me according to the Path of Devotion expounded by me previously, finds that all the deep-rooted (and hence apparently in-eradicable) desires in his heart disappear, as I am established therein.

30. The very moment, I, the Soul of all, am realized, the knot (of ahamkāra) in the heart is snapped; all his doubts are cut asunder, and all his Karmas are exhausted.

31. Hence neither spiritual wisdom (jñāna) nor renunciation (vairāgya) is a general pre-condition for attaining the Final Beatitude (mokṣa) (in the Path of devotion) if the Bhakti-Yogin (the follower of the path of devotion) has intense devotion to me and has his mind firmly fixed in me.

32-33. What is secured by performing prescribed Vedic Karmas or by undergoing austere penance or by spiritual knowledge or from dispassion or by following the path of Yoga or by pious liberal donations as also by other means of attaining spiritual bliss—all this my devotee fully and easily realizes by the path of Bhakti whether it be svarga (Heaven) or mokṣa or even my abode.

34. But pious people who are wise and absolutely devoted to me desire nothing, even if absolute liberation from which there is no return to Samsāra, is conferred on them by me.

35. Desirelessness is, therefore, the highest and the most efficacious way to attain the summum bonum. Hence real devotion is engendered in him who longs for no blessings and solicits nothing.

36. Merit and sin resulting from the commission or omission of the enjoined or interdicted acts are not binding on those who are absolutely devoted to me, are even-minded and have realized me who am transcendental to reason.

37. In this way, those who follow these paths proclaimed by me, attain to the blessed abode of mine, which the learned know as the Supreme Brahman.

CHAPTER TWENTYONE

Criteria for determining the good and the evil

The Lord said:

1. Those persons who discard the path of devotion, spiritual knowledge and righteous (desireless) actions which have been expounded by me (and which lead to me), and seek trivial pleasures through fickle senses, continue to wander through various species in samsāra.

2. Firm adherence to the course of duties to which one is eligible (by Śāstric prescription) is described as virtue while the reverse of it (i.e. strayed devotion to another man's duties to which one is not eligible) is a fault. Such is the definite decision about them both (i.e. about virtue and fault)<sup>1</sup>.

3.* Even if things (or acts) be similar, the decisions that it is pure or impure, virtue or fault, auspicious or inauspicious, are made for the guidance of investigation so that one may control one's inclination towards them.

4. O sinless Uddhava ! It is for the sake of distinguishing the righteous way from the unrighteous, what is pure and what is impure, has been decided for regulating the behaviour—what course of conduct is permissible for kings (under emergency some concession has to be given to a ruler for adopting the inauspicious or impure means or to an individual for

1. ŚR. clarifies that a virtue or a fault is not inherent in the act, but it is the eligibility of the doer which decides the matter.

* VR. Though the factors of an act (such as Time, Place, agent, mantras or the particular karma be the same, they present two different sides of eligibility. It is after investigation that one can decide whether it is good (leading to auspicious consequences) and bad (resulting in evil consequences).

the bare maintenance of his life but to store such impure substances is forbidden). Such a (sinless) course of conduct has been shown by me (in the form of smṛti-writers like Manu and others) for the guidance of those who are the bearers of the responsibility of showing the path of religion.

5-6. The elements, viz. earth, water, fire, air and sky, united with the Soul, constitute the causes of the bodies of all beings, from god Brahmā to an immobile. Even through the point of material bodies and the Ātman all creatures are constitutionally the same, it is, however, to enable these creatures to attain their respective objectives in life (viz. Dharma, Artha, Kāma and Mokṣa) that the Veda has given them diverse names and forms (about their respective Varṇa and Āśrama) and enjoined their respective code of conduct.

7. It is for regulating what work should be done or what act be prohibited that qualities like goodness or badness have been ordained by me with respect to time, place and other conditions, as well as with reference to substances or things (like rice) to be obtained, O pious-most Uddhava, (my object being to ensure the attainment of the fruits of Karma<sup>1</sup>).

8. Out of countries, those tracts of land where black-antelopes are not found are unholy, and it is still more so, if people there-of cherish no devotion to Brāhmaṇas. Even if hallowed by the presence of black deer, the tract known as Sauvīra<sup>2</sup> (i.e. lacking in pious people) or Kīkaṭa<sup>3</sup> (Eastern Bihar, Bengal and Orissa and inhabited by the uncultured people or having the majority of Mlecchas or a barren place, is unholy).

1. Karmanām niyamārtham phala-sāadhanārtham /—VJ.

2. Variously identified with upper sindh (VR and N.L. De) or northern Saurāṣṭra along the Gulf of Cutch (Rhys Davids.) ŚR. is led away by grammatical derivation.

3. It appears that in the old Smṛti period, these states were not completely Aryanised. Hence a visitor to them, except on purpose of a holy pilgrimage, had to expiate the sin of visiting it, by the rite of investing the sacred thread. VR quotes a smṛti text as follows :

Anga-Vaṅga-Kalīṅgeṣu Saurāṣṭra-Magadheṣu ca /
Tīrtha-yātrām vind gtvā punaḥ saṁskāram arhati / /

9. That period of time is regarded as auspicious or good which is proper for performing Vedic rites either due to adequate supply of materials (for that rite or sacrifice) or by its very nature (e.g. the early part of the day). But the time when the materials for the rite are not available or there are politically, unsettled conditions and earthquakes etc., or when the period is unfit for performance of religious rites (e.g. during the mourning period), that period of Time is considered to be bad or inauspicious.

10. The purity or impurity of a substance depends on the contacts with some other thing (e.g. washing with water purifies a thing, while if contacted with urine it becomes impure), or by the word (e.g. in case of doubt about purity, the decision of a learned Brāhmaṇa), or by purification (e.g. sprinkling flowers with water purifies them, but by smelling they lose their sanctity for worship), by passage of time<sup>1</sup>, or by the bigness or smallness of size (e.g. a big lake cannot be polluted by the touch of a man of the depressed class but it is regarded 'polluted', if the tank is a small one.)

11 (The same thing becomes pure to one and impure to another). The purity or the impurity of a thing depends upon the physical strength or weakness<sup>2</sup> (Time of receiving) the information or knowledge<sup>3</sup> and affluence;<sup>4</sup> (certain things are pure or impure in relation to different places, states and other circumstances). Hence the incurrance of sin depends on the time and other circumstances<sup>5</sup>.

1. ŚR. quotes a Smṛti which lays down :

Rainwater stored in reservoirs should be used for drinking but it should be avoided for the first three days. As for water stored at other times, one should wait for ten days after which it attains purity.

2. Eating food during the period of solar or lunar eclipse is prohibited as sinful to normal people but is permissible to the aged, sick or weak persons —ŚR.

3. If the birth of a child in the family is informed within ten days, the nearest kins have to observe a seclusion but the same information after ten days has no such binding effect.—ŚR.

4. To use soiled or old clothes is permissible to the poor, but a rich person incurs sin by using them—ŚR.

5. For example : It is sinful not to wear a gold ring at the time of performing sandhyā or other religious duties. But it is not sinful if they are

12. The purity of (food) grains, utensils of wood, bones (like ivory), textiles, liquids like oil, ghee, metals like gold and deer skins and earthen wares, bricks etc. is decided by Time, air, fire, earth and water either jointly or severally.

13. By applying which things an object smeared with an impure thing removes that impure coating, and foul smell and restores its normal state to it, is called the purifier.

14. A 'twice-born' person (even a Śūdra is to be included in this category) should purify himself by sanctifying acts and factors like bathing, giving charitable gifts, performance of penance, age (of eligibility for performing a certain act) physical power, initiatory rites like investiture of the sacred thread, performance of sandhyā, remembrance of the Lord and his name, and then proceed to perform his prescribed duty.

15. The purity of Mantras depends on correctly knowing its procedure and application from the proper preceptor. Resigning a Karma to me, is the purity of that act. Religious merit is acquired through the purity of above-mentioned six (viz. place, time, substance, agent, the sacred formula—the mantra and the righteous act performed). The opposite of it results from the absence of these circumstances.

16. (Intrinsically a thing or an act is neither good nor bad). Under some circumstance a merit turns out to be demerit. (Acceptance of help of a thing in emergency may be condoned but the same is a fault in normal condition), but by a quirk of fate, it may be vice versa. The Vedas have ordained some injunctions for the regulation in deciding merit and demerit (or for creation of dispassion about objects of senses), but confusion in understanding them fundamentally cuts the distinction.

17. Those who are already sinners, commission of an act similar to other sinner is no longer a demerit. Sexual intercourse with one's married wife (during the prescribed not worn in regions infested by robbers. ŚR. quotes a Smṛti text which lays down that the factors of time, place, physical and mental condition, materials, its objects and other relevant circumstances must be taken into account before determining the purity of a thing or a person.

period) is not a sin for a householder, though it is so for a Sannyāsin. He who lies on the ground has no further fall.

18. From whatever object or course of action, a person desists, he becomes free from attachment. This Dharma (righteous course of action) is the source of well-being and removes grief, delusion and fear.

19. By mistaken attribution of agreeable qualities to (sense)-objects, man comes to cherish attachment for them. From attachment springs up the desire to possess it, and desire leads to quarrel among men (for securing it for one's self).

20. A quarrel breeds irrepressible anger which is followed by infatuation. And the all-round grasping capacity and judgement of man is soon swallowed up (and obscured) by this self-delusion.

21. O pious Uddhava ! A man devoid of intellect and judgement is reduced to the stage of non-existence. He fails in (accomplishing) his purpose in life, even as a man who has lost his consciousness or is dead.

22. Through deep attachment to worldly objects, he does not realize himself nor the Supreme Self. He wastes his life in vain like a tree, breathing mechanically like bellows.

23. Just as a promise of delicious (eatables) is made (to children) before administering a dose of (wholesome yet unpalatable) medicine, this promise of fruits to be reaped (in heaven) is made for creating a liking (for religious duties), as an introduction to the elucidation of the (path to the) summum bonum or Mokṣa, even though it does not lead men to the final beatitude.

24. Even though they are the cause of misery (viz. bondage in Samsāra) to the Soul, men, by their very nature, are attached in their heart of hearts to their desires and belongings (like cattle) to their life and to their relatives.

25. How can a wise person (or the Veda) direct persons who are ignorant of their own real interests (or the highest spiritual bliss) and yet put implicit faith in the Vedas which promise cattle, long life<sup>1</sup>, progeny etc., through performance of sacrifices wander in the path of misery (of Samsāra) and (after enjoying the celestial life) enter the dark hell in the form of plant life?<sup>1</sup>

26. Not comprehending this real purport of the Vedas, some persons of low understanding (of Asura mentality) mistake flowers (i.e. flower-like heavenly enjoyments) for the fruit of eternal bliss in Mokṣa. But the real knowers of the Veda (like sage Vyāsa) never do so<sup>2</sup>.

27. Persons hankering after sensual desires are miserly and avaricious. They regard the flower (the flowery pleasures in heaven) as the fruit (of Liberation from samsāra). They are stupefied by the Fire-cult, and at the end of their life go by the path of smoke (dhūma mārṅa), and fail to realize their self and their real region, viz. Mokṣa.

28. Like unto persons whose vision is bedimmed with mist, they, to whom ritualistic performance or killing beasts for sacrifices appear as the real teachings of the Veda and are bent on gratifying their carnal desires, do not know me who am stationed in their very heart (as their Inner Controller)—me who constitute this universe, and from whom this world has been created, O dear Uddhava.

29. If persons have a liking for eating flesh and would like to kill animals, they should restrict this injury to life to the performance of sacrifices (in which the flesh remaining after oblations is shared by all as prasāda—the grace of gods). But this (performance of animal sacrifices) is not an obligatory duty.<sup>3</sup> Without understanding my implied meaning expressed indirectly, these persons who are addicted to sensual

1. VJ. raises the objection that the scripture which misleads people to momentary pleasures would cease to be Veda (katham iti viśayābhiniवेशena tamo viśatas tām punas teṣu viśayeṣu Vedaḥ katham yuñjyan na katham api yunakti / unmatta-vākya-sāmyapṛāpti-bhayād iti śeṣaḥ /

2. VJ. : Persons of Asura nature being ignorant of the true purport of the Vedas speak of the heavenly happiness when they really mean that Liberation from samsāra is the real fruit. VJ. thinks that Asuras (i.e. persons of Asura nature) are implied in these verses.

3. Some editions add : “Hearing this commandment of the Veda, people are not deluded into such acts.”

pleasures<sup>1</sup>, unnecessarily kill animals and get themselves troubled and tortured by them after death.

30. Those wicked persons who take delight in killing animals for sport, (outwardly) worship gods, manes and lords of beings by the slaughtered animals oblated in performing sacrifices, but they really want to gratify their addiction (to flesh).

31. Painting in their mind (the rosy picture) that the next world which is unreal like a dream, non-existent, yet charming to the ear, is certainly real, they spend their resources (in performing sacrifices) entertaining the hopes of blessings (in the next world), just as a merchant, (abandoning his present fortune) stakes the whole of his property (in a dubious sea voyage) in the hope of earning more wealth (and loses both).

32. Persons in whom these attributes, viz. Sattva, Rajas and Tamas are ingrained, worship gods headed by Indra who, being possessed of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas, take delight in them but they do not worship me (who transcend the guṇas).

33. They strongly hope that by worshipping god with performance of sacrifices in this world (during their life-time), they would enjoy themselves with heavenly pleasures (in the next world) and at the end of that celestial life, they would be born in noble lineage and live in palatial mansions.

34. With their minds distracted by the flowery language of Karma-Kāṇḍa holding out promise of heavenly life) these proud and highly obstinate persons (steeped in perverse notions) do not like even the mention of my name.

35. (As a matter of fact the Vedas advocate the path of renunciation). Although the Vedas deal with the three subjects (viz. those concerning ritualism, devotion and spiritual knowledge), they teach mainly about the Brahman and the Ātman<sup>2</sup>

1. SS & VR add here : vr̥thā paśūn vihiṃsanti hiṃsyante pretya tais tu te j

2. VR. : They teach that the Supreme Brahman is abiding as the Inner Controller in all beings (sarvāntarātmā-bhūta-Para-brahma-viśayaḥ). They deal with the nature of the Supreme Brahman, His attributes and the path of Brahma-realization.

(that the Ātman and Brahman are identical). The Vedic texts (mantras) or their seers present their exposition in an indirect way, as such presentation (with hidden import) is liked by me (it is expected that only the pure-hearted persons are eligible to know the real import of Vedas. If others follow it literally, they will be misled and give up their karmas (religious duties) prematurely).

36.* The Veda, the verbal form of the Brahman, is extremely difficult for comprehension. It constitutes the vital air (The Parā stages of speech), the mental faculty (the Paśyanti and Madhyamā stages of speech at the mental plane) and the oral expression (the Vaikharī stage). From the cosmic point of view the cosmic prāṇa is limitless and unending, too deep for comprehension and unfathomable like the sea.

37. It is presided over (from within) by me who am all pervading, master of infinite powers, the attributeless, changeless Brahman, the inner Controller and perceived in all created beings in the form of 'unstruck', (anāhata) sound like fibers filling the stalk of a lotus.

38. Just as a spider evolves (lit. vomits) out of its mouth woolly cob-web fibers from its heart, the Lord in the form of Hiranyagarbha, through Prāṇa (the vital air) manifests himself in the form of Veda. Essentially he is absolutely blissful. With the material of eternally abiding unstruck, (anāhata) sound emanating from the cavity of the heart through the medium of the mind, he brings out various sounds represented in the letters of the alphabet.

39-40 The Lord who is the embodiment of the Vedic meters and essentially sweet (lit. nectarine), manifests out of Om

* (i) EK : After explaining how Prāṇava evolves from the Parā vāṇī till it is expressed orally (with the vaikharī he states that despite the efforts of sages like Vyāsa, Sumantu, Jaimini and others, the Veda has remained incomprehensible, but it is the Lord who knows the inner subtle meaning of the Veda.

(ii) VJ : Veda is incomprehensible except through my Grace. The terms prāṇa etc. in the verse designate god Brahmā and others which preside over senses. The Veda is too deep etc. like the sea for the ineligible persons (alpādhikāriṇaḥ).

the Vaikhari form (of speech) which flowed out in a thousand ways beautiful with various sounds classified as consonants, vowels, sibilants (Ś, Ṣ, S), semivowels (y, r, l, v). Such proliferated praṇava (OM) became expanded in various languages and was characterised by metres each consisting of four more letters than the previous one, and is (in a way) limitless. The Lord who creates this unlimited Vedic speech, also withdraws it<sup>1</sup> within himself.

41. (In the Vedas) there are many metres like Gāyatrī, Uṣṇik, Anuṣṭubh, Br̥hatī, Pañkti, Triṣṭubha, Jagatī, Aticchanda Atyaṣṭi Atijagatī and Virāṭ.

42. Nobody else except I in this world, knows the real implication<sup>2</sup>—the very heart as to what the Veda prescribes, what it explains, what it prohibits after making a statement.

43.* It lays down injunctions of worshipping me (through performance of sacrifices—This is the Karma Kāṇḍa).

1. VR. : All the articulated sounds are evolved out of OM (Praṇava). It is ever-abiding and of unlimited extent, expressing wonderful ideas in four chief metres (each foot of which is longer by four syllables than that of the previous metre). It is Prāṇa which evolves and withdraws this speech.

2. VJ. : It is only the vital breath who, through my Grace knows it (. . . cet ko vāyur mat-prasādat vetti)

* (1) ŚR and GD : Just as the sap derived from the seed by the sprout proliferates into branches but the original sap runs all through these branches, leaves etc., the Lord, the “sap” of Praṇava, pervades all the branches of the Veda which is a proliferation of Om.

ŚR. pays obeisance to the eternally-free promulgator and Knower of the Veda who enlightened him on what is Ātman. This Supreme Ruler is his preceptor and his preceptor is the Almighty Lord. ‘To him I bow’.

(2) VR. : The Veda states that the difference such as a man, a god, a subhuman being etc., is the modification of Prakṛti and this difference has nothing to do with the individual Soul (jīva). The veda finally concludes that I (the Lord) am distinct from every other principles (vedaḥ . . . deva-manuṣyādi-bhidāṁ māyā-mātram prakṛti-mātram anūdyatām jīva-svarūpe pratiṣiddhya . . . sarva-tattva-vilakṣaṇa-mat-pratipādanena paryavasita-vyāpāro bhavattityetāvān evetyarthaḥ !)

(3) VJ. : There is no difference in my incarnations. I am Viṣṇu in each of them. The bondage of saṁsāra is due to my will. By following the path of devotion, the spiritual knowledge dawns and the jīva is liberated. Stating this the Veda which depends on Vāsudeva for its supports sinks into silence.

It declares my Nature (as gods to be worshipped and enunciates the path of Devotion or, and it removes Upāsanā Kāṇḍa) external universe that is imposed on me (i.e. the part called knowledge—Jñāna Kāṇḍa). I am verily the purport of the entire Veda. Basing itself on me, the Veda first explains diversity (in me) as the result of Māyā—(Finally) denying the reality of diversity, the Veda assumes silence (is merged in me. Ultimately I alone stay existent).

CHAPTER TWENTYTWO

Enumeration of Principles (Tattvas) The Distinction between Prakṛti and Puruṣa

Uddhava enquired :

1. How many fundamental categories or principles have been enumerated by sages, O Lord of the Universe ? We have heard you enumerate them as nine, eleven, five, three—in all twenty-eight categories—previously.<sup>1</sup>

2-3. Some say that the number of categories is twentysix, others twentyfive, some others seven; some declare it to be sixteen, four and eleven respectively; while some others state that it is seventeen, some, sixteen while some others thirteen. Be pleased to explain to me, O Long-lived one, with what stand-points the sages severally declare (lit. sing) such a variety in the total number of categories.

The Lord replied :

4*. Though it is not supported by Reality what those Brāhmaṇas (experts in Vedas) declare is but correct as all the

(4) JG. : The Veda feels that it has achieved its purpose by entire dependence on Lord Kṛṣṇa. He quoted BG. (XV. 15). Vedaś ca sarvair aham eva vedyaḥ etc.

1. vide Supra, ch. 19.14.

*. VR : when the Brāhmaṇas accept my Māyā or Prakṛti as the basis for classification, what position is impossible and hence untenable. Hence all the positions taken by Brāhmaṇas stand to reason.

categories are mutually inclusive. What theory is not tenable (lit. difficult to establish) when my Mâyâ potency is accepted.

5. "The reality is not as you stated; what I affirm is correct." The cause of difference among such disputants is my insurmountable potencies<sup>1</sup> viz. Sattva, Rajas and Tamas which create innumerable mental tendencies.

6*. Difference (of viewpoints or theories) which becomes the subject of arguments among the disputants arises due to the cogitations (and resulting permutations and combination) of these powers. But when the control of the mind and the senses is achieved, the cause of disputation disappears and as a sequel, wrangling or discussion ceases altogether.

7. Due to the mutual inclusiveness of the categories, the enumeration of categories varies according to the stance adopted by the speaker in explaining them as cause and effect, (resulting in the inclusion of effects into causes).

8. Even in only one category all the other categories are found included, irrespective of their inclusion either as a cause or an effect.

9. As there is the possibility of offering a logical reasoning for the causal relations of these categories as well as their enumeration as advanced by these disputants, according to their capacity of argumentation, we, therefore accept the position presented by them.

10. As realization of the Ātman by self-effort is not possible in the case of a person possessed by nescience or ignorance which has no beginning, another person who knows the truth is essential for imparting the truth to him. (This preceptor being God as distinct from Jīva, the number of categories becomes twenty-six according to these disputants).

11. (But those who hold that the number of these principles is twenty-five and not twenty-six argue:) There is not the slightest distinction between Puruṣa (Individual Soul) and

1. VR. regards Prakṛti, Mahat, Ahaṅkāra, etc. as God's powers.

*. According to VJ, wrong apprehension is due to the different powers of the Lord and the wrangling on different viewpoints is due to different attitudes of the mind. Once the mind is concentrated on the Lord through sense-control, misapprehension disappears.

Īśvara (God), as both are characterised by intelligence and consciousness). The assumption that they are mutually distinct and different is not correct. (The argument that God must be posited for imparting Self-realization is untenable as) (Self-knowledge or the faculty of knowing is inherent in sattva-guṇa which is a constituent of Prakṛti).

12. Prakṛti is nothing but the equilibrium of the attributes or modifications known as Sattva, Rajas and Tamas. They (Sattva, Rajas and Tamas) are the cause of the creation, sustenance and destruction of the universe respectively. Thus they are the attributes of Prakṛti and never that of Ātman.

13. In this (Sāṅkhya) system of thought, knowledge is regarded as the modification of the attribute called Sattva, action, that of Rajas and ignorance, that of Tamas. Time is the cogitating principle disturbing the equilibrium and agitating the guṇas while Nature is the Sūtra or Mahat.

14*. (After elucidating the three categories mentioned (v. one above) the Lord enumerates the nine principles in that verse as follows :)

Puruṣa (The Intelligent Principle), Prakṛti (The Primordial Matter), Vyakta or Mahat (the principle of Cosmic intelligence) Ahaṁkāra (the cosmic Ego), the sky, air, fire or light, water and the earth—these are the nine categories enumerated by me.

15. The senses of hearing, touch, sight, smell and taste—are the faculties of cognitive senses. While the organs of speech, hands, the organ of generation, the organ of excretion are the conative organs. The mind, however, is both a cognitive and conative (internal) organ, dear Uddhava.

16. Sound, touch, taste, smell and colour or form—these are the five varieties of objects of senses, while locomotion, expression or speech, excretion (including urination and defecation) and manual skill are the functions of the organs of action.

*. VR. : Puruṣa and Prakṛti constitute the body of Paramātmān. Ahaṁkāra includes all sense-organs and the five elements have in them five objects of senses.

17. At the beginning, at the time of creation of the Universe, Prakṛti assumes the functions of both cause and effects. Through its attributes Sattva and others, it assumes the state of being created, while the unmanifest Puruṣa remains as a witness.

18. The Mahat and other categories being agitated and impregnated with the energy of the glance of the intelligent principle (Puruṣa) combine together and create the egg of the Universe, reinforced with the power imparted by Prakṛti.

19. Those who hold that there are only seven categories state them as follows: Five categories beginning with the ether, knowledge i.e. knower or Jīva (Individual soul) and the Ātman (Supreme Soul), the support (of the seer and the seen, the subject and the object). The body, sense organs (and five) life breaths are evolved from these.

20. According to those who hold that the number of categories is six, they are as follows: Five elements and the sixth is the Supreme Person. Combining with the elements which are evolved (out of himself) by him, he created this universe and entered into it (as Antaryāmin, the Inner controller).

21. *(Another view mentioned in verse above holds that) the number of categories is only four. These are as follows: Fire, water and food i.e. the earth, which are born of the (fourth category viz.) Ātman. Like the evolution of things made up of parts, the creation of the universe (which too consists of numerous parts) has taken place out of these (four categories).

22. (In verse 3 above, a view holds that the total number of categories is seventeen.) When the total number of categories is spoken of as seventeen, they are enumerated as follows; Five gross elements, five subtle elements<sup>1</sup> (mātrā = tan-mātrā); five

* It is not understood why VR includes the explanation of eleven categories here when a later i.e. 24th verse deals with eleven categories. According to VR the Ātman, five elements and five (cognitive) senses make up the eleven categories.

1. EK takes mātrā = objects of senses, EB 22.2-4.

(cognitive) senses, mind and the Ātman, the seventeenth category.

23. When (the principles or categories are) counted as sixteen, the Ātman (the thinking Principle) is also spoken of as the mind (the rest being as in the above verse). They (number of categories) are said to be thirteen, when the five elements (Bhūtas), five senses, the mind and soul in two forms (viz. Individual soul and the Supreme Soul) are calculated together.

24. Another view which holds that the total number of categories as eleven, is as follows: The Soul (including the mind) consists of five elements (Bhūtas) and five senses. While eight Prakṛtis (viz. mahat, Ahaṅkāra, mind and five elements, combined with Puruṣa (the intelligent Principle) make up the nine categories.

25. In this way different enumerations of fundamental categories have been hypothesized by old sages (to clarify the difference between Prakṛti and Puruṣa. All of them are tenable as they are cogently supported by (logical) reasoning. How can a theory proposed by the wise be unbecoming ?

Uddhava submitted :

26. O Kṛṣṇa, although (as you say it) Prakṛti (Primordial nature) and Puruṣa (the intelligent Principle) possess by their very nature different distinctive characteristics, (in our practical life) no difference between them is noticeable as they are mutually dependent and inter-related. (The Ātman is found in the physical body which is the product of Prakṛti while Prakṛti is found in the Ātman, as both body and Soul appear identical).

27. For the Ātman is noticed in the Prakṛti (the physical body being a product of Prakṛti), while the Prakṛti is found in the Ātman. (The very concept of "I" is impossible unless Prakṛti and Ātman are together, O lotus-eyed Lord, it behoves you to remove this grave doubt in my mind, by your decisive words supported by skilful logical reasons, O Omniscient Lord.

28. It is through your grace that the individual Souls (jīvas) receive enlightenment. It is due to your power (called Avidyā or Nescience) that knowledge of the jīvas is obscured. You alone and nobody else knows the course and working of your own Māyā.

The Lord replied :

29. There is a fundamental difference between Prakṛti<sup>1</sup> (the psycho-physical organism called the body) and Puruṣa (the Soul), O eminent Uddhava. This (body) is subject to changes (such as boy-hood, youth, old age, etc.) as it is created out of the disturbance of the balance of guṇas (while the Soul is changeless and self-existent).

30. Dear Uddhava my Māyā which is constituted of three guṇas, creates through them manifold differences and concepts about them, in various ways. The creation which is subject to modifications is of three types—Adhyātma, Adhidaiva and Adhibhūta.

31. (For example) The sense of sight is Adhyātma The form or colour (i.e. the object seen) is Adhibhūta and the aṁśa or part of the sun present in the ocular sense is Adhidaiva. These are interdependent (any one of them depends on the other two) for its existence. But not so that (the sun) which exists independently in the sky. In the same way the Soul (Ātman) who is the cause of the Adhyātma etc. is different from them. It is by virtue of his own inherent power of consciousness that he illumines other agents (such as Adhyātma) which shed light on others. Similar (threefold) nature can be predicated about the senses of touch, hearing, smell and taste and of the mental faculties (ego, etc.)

1. SS.VR. and VJ. interpret Prakṛti in a broad sense as 'the created universe'.

(i) VR : This created universe consisting of Adhibhūta, Adhidaiva and Adhyātma, is evolved out of Ahaṁkāra which in turn is the evolute of Prakṛti. Ahaṁkāra as applied to an individual is a synthesis of Ātmic (or psychic) qualities expressing love, hate and physical qualities like corpulence, etc.

(ii) VJ : There is a cardinal difference between Prakṛti and Puruṣa. The confusion between the two is due to misapprehension caused by Tamo-guṇa. The universe is a creation of the combination of guṇas in different proportions, with a particular guṇa dominating the whole combination.

32. Ahaṁkāra (the ego) is the modification caused by the agitation of guṇas (as a result of the disturbance of their equilibrium) caused by the Time-spirit or the Supreme Ruler (who is thus an instrumental cause). It is an evolute of the Mahat, of which Prakṛti is the material cause. It is of three types viz. Vaikārika (from Sattva guṇa), Aindriya (from Rajo-guṇa) and Tāmasa (from Tamo-guṇa). It is the Ahaṁkāra which causes the notion of difference and delusion.

33. The Ātman is essentially pure knowledge. The controversy about the existence or non-existence of difference (between the Soul and the body or Ahaṁkāra is due to non-realization of the self. Though it has no basis and is meaningless (as it lasts till self-realization), it is true that it will not disappear from the minds of those who are averse to me—their very self.<sup>1</sup>

Uddhava said :

34-35. Be pleased to explain to me how persons whose minds have turned away from you, accept (are born into) and give up (in death) various bodies high or low as determined by their own Karmas, O Govinda. This phenomenon is very difficult to comprehend (properly in all its aspects) by persons of poor understanding. Generally there is a scarcity of persons who know this as all people are deluded (by your Māyā)<sup>2</sup>

The Lord explained :

36. The mind of men as modified by the subtle impressions left by karmas and accompanied by the five (subtle)

1. VJ : Such people presume existence for the non-existence and vice versa. Perceiving what is contrary to reality these people identify Jīva with Īśvara and deny the reality of the universe (A dig at Advaitavāda). According to VJ—difference between Jīva, Īśvara and the reality of the universe is true, but the opponents deny it and hence the controversy.

2. VJ thinks that the purpose of Uddhavas' asking this question is to know if there is any other cause of the transmigration of the soul.

(nityānāṁ jīvānāṁ janma-mṛti kīḍṛgyau, Karmataḥ kāraṇaṁ kim iti prcchati Uddhavaḥ).

senses, transmigrates from one region (i.e. body) to another and the Soul though distinctly different from them, follows (due to the influence of Ahamkāra.)

37. The mind is under the dominance of (the residual impressions left by) Karmas. According to their influence the mind (at the time of death) broods over the objects actually experienced (during the life-time) or heard (as promises of future fruits of karmas as stated in scriptures. (After death) he becomes manifest (i.e. is reborn) among the objects contemplated by him and the previous objects (in the last existence) are lost in oblivion. Thereafter, the memory connecting the previous existence with the present birth becomes lost.

38. Due to excessive attachment to the present body and objects of enjoyment or due to some mysterious reason a person does not remember (anything about) his body, etc. of the last existence. Such total obliviousness is verily the death of a being. (It is the body that is forgotten and dead and not the Soul).

39. And they (scriptures) opine that the (new) birth of a being consists of the identification on the part of the jīva with the objects of enjoyment i.e. with a particular body just as one imagines oneself identical with the body in one's dreams or in a day-dream (forgetting that his body in the wakeful condition is different, O liberal Uddhava.

40. In this manner, in the present dream state, the jīva does not remember his previous dreams or reverie and looks upon himself as a newly born person, though as a matter of fact he is the same old already existent person.

41. When a new body which is the site of the ten sense-organs, is born or the mind, the basis of the senses, identifies itself with a new body (in a different birth), the three-fold distinction (viz. a particular body being the highest, the middling and the lowest, Or of being in the wakeful, dreamy or sleepy state, Or the body, the mind and senses) though unreal, becomes apparent in the Ātman who alone is real. Due to false identification with them, the Ātman becomes the cause for the idea of internal and external differences (i.e. He enjoys external objects of senses and experiences internal (mental) states such as pleasure, pain etc.). Even as an individual Soul (jīva) creates (out of himself) a number of unreal bodies and sees himself as many in a dream or the father of a wicked son, though himself impartial, looks upon differently with the friends and foes of his wicked sons.

42. (In order to confirm Uddhava's feeling of renunciation, the Lord adds unasked).

It is every moment that bodies of creatures come into being and go out of existence, through the force of Time of inexorable velocity. But the velocity is too subtle to be perceptible to gross senses.

43. Just as in the cases of changes (in size of) flames, the flow of the current of a stream and changes in the (green or unripe, yellowish or ripe) appearances of fruit, so in the case of all created beings, changes in age and other factors (such as physical strength, lust, skill, etc. are brought about by (the continuous current of) Time.

44. (Even though the luminous particles in a flame appear and disappear every moment) the statement is made that 'This is the same lamp', (and although particles of water flow down the current giving place to other ones at the same spot in the stream of water) it is asserted that 'this is the same water of the stream',<sup>1</sup> similarly when the persons whose life is a waste (due to ignorance) say, 'He is the same man,' their notion and talk is unreal (for changes take place in the body every moment. The notion of unchanging absolute identity is incorrect).

45. Even this (ignorant) person is neither born nor dead due to the seed of his karmas. The Ātman is immortal. It is an illusion to predicate birth and death in the case of Ātman, as in the case of fire (which survives to the end of the Kalpa but) which is regarded as enkindled or extinguished due to the limiting condition of the piece of wood with which it is associated.

46. Entry into the womb, existence in the womb, birth, childhood (upto the age of five), boyhood (upto the age of sixteen), youth (upto the age of fifty), middle age (upto the age of sixty), old age and death—These are the nine stages of the body.

47. These fanciful states of the body (which are not related to the Soul), both high and low, are identified as one's own due to associations with Guṇas. It is seldom that someone disowns them and casts them off (through the Grace of God).

48. One's own birth can be inferred from that of one's son and death, by that of one's father. But he who clearly understands that birth and death are related to the body, this knower is the Ātman who is not subject to and characterized by both (birth and death).

49. Just as the knower of the sprouting of a plant and of its end, is different from the plant itself, so also the Ātman who is the seer, is distinct from the body.

50. An ignorant person does not distinguish his Ātman from his body in this way and becomes infatuated with the object of the senses and identifies himself with the body, and thus becomes a subject of transmigration or Samsāra.

51. He wanders in the whirligig of Samsāra by being born as a sage or a god by doing actions dominated by sattva-guṇa; by his association with rajas he is born among Asuras or human beings, and through association with tamas, he goes to the state of evil spirits or sub-human beings.

52. Just as one imitates the artistes while one witnesses a dance or attends a musical performance, in the same way the Ātman though free from desires or inactive, witnesses the qualities of Ahaṁkāra and is prompted to imitate them.

53-54. Just as trees (though stationary) on the bank of a flowing stream of water appear to be moving or when the eye is set rolling, the earth appears to be rolling; or just as reveries and dream visions though unreal give the pleasurable and painful experience to one, similarly, the samsāra that is the pleasures or the pains experienced therein are unreal, O descendent of Dāśārha.

55. Though from the point of reality, worldly objects have no existence, the samsāra does not vanish in the case of a person who broods over them, just as a person experiences evils in a dream.

56. Therefore, O Uddhava, do not enjoy the objects of pleasure with the senses which are by nature evil (unreal). Please understand that it is merely an illusion which shows difference which is reflected in the Ātman due to ignorance about its true nature.

57-58. Even if scolded, insulted, defrauded, envied, belaboured, fettered, deprived of the means of livelihood or defiled with actual spitting and urination and thus persecuted in various ways by the wicked and the ignorant, and thus subjected to a difficult situation, an aspirant after Final beatitude should extricate his Ātman by dint of his own self.

Uddhava submitted:

59. Please explain to me in such a way as I may understand it, O prominent among the eloquents. I consider this outrage of the wicked on my self as simply unbearable.

60. Nature (or Attachment to one's body) is too powerful even for learned people, (they will certainly revolt against such treatment) except in the case of those who are absorbed in performing the (course of) duties enjoined by you, and have become quiescent by securing asylum at your feet.

CHAPTER TWENTYTHREE

The Song of a Recluse (Bhikṣu Gitā)

Śrī Suka (son of the sage Bādarāyaṇa) said:

1. When thus prayed by Uddhava, the foremost of his devotees, Lord Kṛṣṇa, the prominent leader of the Dāśārha clan, whose glorious exploits are worth listening, appreciated the speech of his servant (devotee) and explained to him in details.

The glorious Lord said:

2. O disciple of Bṛhaspati ! Verily there is hardly any such perfectly pious soul who is capable of consoling his mind which is pierced by the harsh abraisive language of the wicked.

3. A person is not so much pained when pierced by arrows in his vital parts, as he is by the shaft-like cruel words uttered by the wicked, cutting to the quick.

4. In this context, a holy ancient legend is (traditionally) told, O Uddhava. I shall describe it to you. Please listen to it with full concentration of mind.

5. This legend is sung by a certain recluse who was maltreated by the wicked, but who retained the composure of his mind by remembering it to be the consequence of his Karma ripened into fruition.

6. In the country of Avanti (country around Ujjain in Madhya Pradesh), there lived a certain twice-born (Brāhmaṇa) tycoon of enormous wealth, a merchant-cum-agriculturist by profession. He was so miserly that he made his own body, sons, wife, deities, guests and servants to suffer by his parsimony. He was a woman-addict, greedy and most irascible by nature.

7. He never showed the courtesy of greeting his relatives and guests, at least orally. In his desolate house (devoid of religious activities), he did not satisfy his self by catering to its needs and desired objects, at the proper time.

8. His sons and relatives hated him for his wickedness and miserliness. His wife, daughters and servants felt disgusted with him and did nothing that would please him.

9. With this type of Yakṣa (ghost—) like guardian of wealth who was destitute of both the puruṣārthas in life (viz. righteousness and enjoyment of pleasure), and had thus fallen from this world as the next, the five deities of the five daily great sacrifices (mahāyajñas) viz. gods, sages, forefathers, sub-human beings and men (all of whom are claimants to our earnings) got enraged with him.

10. O highly liberal Uddhava ! As all the fund of his merit got exhausted due to his neglect of the (above-mentioned five) deities, even his entire wealth which was amassed by him with great labour and pain was lost.

11. Some of the wealth of that wretched Brāhmaṇa was appropriated by his relatives. Thieves robbed some of it, while the rest was taken away by Providence, Time, government and other people, O Uddhava.

12. In this way when he became destitute of wealth, was devoid of righteousness and pleasures in life and was neglected by his relatives, he, being despondent, was lost in deep insuperable anxiety.

13. A deep sense of despair overwhelmed that pitiable Brāhmaṇa, while he was brooding over it for a long time, and was lamenting over it, with his throat choked with tears.

14. He mourned to himself, "Alas ! What a pity ! In vain have I subjected my body to hardship gaining neither religious merit nor any worldly pleasure. And all the hardship for acquisition of wealth was also lost.

15. Generally, the wealth hoarded by the miserly never confers any happiness on them. In this world, it causes affliction to their selves (minds and bodies), and after death it leads them to hell.

16. Just as even a small spot of leprosy mars even an otherwise covetable beauty, so avarice, even of the smallest degree, spoils the pure spotless glory of the glorious and praiseworthy excellences of the virtuous.

17. It is the lot of people to undergo hardships in acquiring wealth, to experience fears and anxieties in preserving and increasing it while acquired, and to suffer delusion when it is lost or spent in enjoyment.

18-19. In the opinion of the public, the fifteen evils found in men viz. theft or misappropriation, violence, falsehood, hypocrisy, lust, anger, pride, arrogance, dissensions, enmity, distrust or breach of faith, rivalry, addiction to women, wine and gambling—all these are rooted in wealth. Therefore, a person desirous of securing the highest good, should renounce even from a distance the evil, the misnomer of which is artha (wealth).

20. Brothers, wives, parents as well as friends—all of whom are tied with bonds of affection—get separated—nay, are instantly made sworn enemies for a paltry piece of coin (a cowrie shell).

21. These (near ones) become agitated and are incensed (lit. burn with anger) even for a paltry amount of money. They suddenly snap bonds of friendship, immediately abandon him out of rivalry to kill him.

22. Having obtained birth in the human species which is sought after even by immortal gods, and even the highest status of Brāhmaṇa, they discard it. Having thus ruined their self-interest, they get degraded into an evil state (viz. hell).

23. Having (fortunately) secured birth in this human body which is a gateway to the heaven (svarga) and Final Emancipation (mokṣa), what person will feel attached to wealth which is the centre (abode) of all evils.

24. He who does not share his wealth with gods, sages, manes, living beings, relatives and kinsmen (all of whom are claimants of that wealth)<sup>1</sup> nor does he spend it on himself, is merely a Yakṣa, (a ghost—) guardian of his wealth and he falls down into hell.

25. My life and strength have been wasted in the fruitless attempt to acquire wealth. It is with these (three) that wise people attain the Final Beatitude. Aged (and devoid of strength and wealth as I am), what good can I accomplish now?

26. For what purpose does a learned person, aware of the evils of wealth, constantly put himself into the vain efforts of acquiring wealth, the desire for which is fruitless? It is certain that this world is thoroughly infatuated by the deluding potency of some (indescribable) person.

27. What purpose of a person who, caught in the jaws of death, is being devoured by death, could be served by riches or by them who bestow wealth on him or by the objects of pleasure or by those who confer such objects on him or by actions which may lead to a new birth?

1. It is regarded that what one acquires does not belong to him only individually, but gods, sages, etc. are also instrumental to that gain and as such these claimants should be propitiated by the daily five mahā-yajñas.

28. It is certain that Lord Hari, the embodiment of all gods, must have been graciously pleased with me and has brought me to such a state. For the despondency (that has been engendered in me by His grace) is the boat (which will help me cross the ocean of samsāra).

29. In the remaining part of my life, I, in whom the sense of renunciation has awakened, shall remain self-complacent (in my mind), and shall cease to be careless about my object in life (viz. working for final beatitude), and shall dry up my body in performing penance.

30. May the gods, the divine rulers of the three worlds bless me with their grace in this state (of working for my own salvation). (My life may be very short) but the ancient pious king Khaṭvāṅga<sup>1</sup> attained the region of Brahman (realized Para Brahman and became one with him) within the brief span of Muhūrta (45 minutes).

The Lord said:

31. Having deliberated and resolved in his mind in this way, that pious-most Brāhmaṇa of Avanti loosened the knots (of Ahaṁkāra and the feeling of mine-ness) in his heart, and turning into a quiescent recluse, he became a sage engrossed in meditation.

32. Having brought his mind, senses and breath under his control, he wandered over this earth, entering towns and villages only for begging alms, wearing no external characteristics (about his being a recluse) and forming no attachment to anything.

33. Seeing that aged, dirty (nude) recluse, evil-minded persons (in the town) maltreated him in various humiliating ways<sup>2</sup>.

34. Some took away his triple bamboo staff (a symbol of total renunciation), some his begging bowl, and others, his

1. vide Supra II.1.13 (Vol. I. P. 154 and Ft. note No. 505).

2. The ill-treatment meted out to this nude, unclean (as ŚR put it) mendicant as given in the following verses, is similar to that given to Mahāvira, the 24th Tirthaṅkara of Jains, as described in the Ācārāṅga Sūtra, I Śrutaskandha. The textual similarity between these two texts is worth noting.

water-jar (of gourd), some, his seat, some, his string of beads and others, his quilting of rags and strips of cloth.

35-36. (To make a show of return) they showed and returned those articles to him and instantly snatched them away from him. While the poor fellow was eating food he got by alms, on the bank of the river, those sinners urinated on his head and spat on him. They forced the silent sage to break his (vow of) silence, and if he refused to speak, they belaboured him.

37. Alleging that he was a thief, some threatened him with words of abuse. Shouting "Bind that fellow". "Tie him down", some people tied him with ropes.

38. Some reviled him contemptuously. "He is a rogue carrying (the triple-staff as) an outward emblem of piety. He has become a bankrupt (depleted in wealth) and is driven out by his relatives, he has therefore adopted to this form of livelihood.

39. (others would say) "O he is quite robust and stout-hearted like a big mountain. He seeks his end by (assuming the vow of) silence. He is relentless like a crane".

40. In this way some ridiculed him; some broke wind against him. Like a toy, they tied him, whilst others, encaged him.

41. Whatever type of affliction that came to his lot—whether caused by the elements, or by his Fate (or gods) or his own body he took it in his stride reconciling himself with it, as ordained by his Fate, in which he must acquiesce.

42. Persecuted thus by the dregs of the society, who wanted to bring about his downfall (by making him abandon his saintly life), the Brāhmaṇa, remaining firm in own Dharma (course of righteous duties) and strong in fortitude of the Sāttvic<sup>1</sup> type, sang the following song.

1. This is defined in BG 18.33 as follows :

The unswerving firmness whereby through Yoga, the functions of mind, the vital breath and senses are regulated, is called sāttvika.

*The Brāhmaṇa said**

43. Neither these persons, nor any deity or myself (body), nor planets nor Karma nor the Time-spirit is the cause of pleasure or pain. But as it is said (in the śrutis), it is the mind alone that is the real cause of these, for it is the mind which sets into motion (the wheel of) Samsāra (worldly existence).

44. It is this powerful mind which creates i.e. sets in motion the guṇas (viz. sattva, rajas and tamas). From those guṇas proceed Karmas of wonderful, various kinds which are white (sāttvika or meritorious), black (Tāmasic, sinful) and red (Rājasika a mixture of merit and sin). It is from these that various species of life (corresponding to the colours of characteristics of the guṇas) proceed.

45**. The Ātman is perfectly unconcerned and inactive, though associated as the Inner Controller with the mind (which is actively engaged in Samsāra). He is shining like gold i.e. is characterised by His potency of perfect knowledge. As a friend or director of mine i.e. of the jīva, he stands merely as a witness with his vision unobstructed. But that very jīva (individual soul) assuming the mind as identical with the Self, enjoys the objects of the senses, becomes attached to the (three) guṇas and gets entangled in the bondage of Samsāra.

46. The control of the mind is the ultimate goal of charitable gifts, observance of righteous duties (prescribed for one's caste and stage in life), abiding by the rules of discipline called Niyama<sup>1</sup> and Yama<sup>2</sup>, study (of philosophy), performance of acts enjoined in the Vedas and observance of good vows (e.g.

* ŚR calls this soliloquy of the Brāhmaṇa as Aṣṭa-dāśa śloki Gītā in eighteen verses), ** VJ :—The Supreme Soul, with unclouded vision, witnesses the activity of the mind of the individual soul. That activity is the cause of Samsāra. But the Supreme Soul is unconnected with it as he is the embodiment of pure bliss. He is my friend. It is the jīva in the bondage of Samsāra, who is deeply attached to his mind which forms his subtle body. It is the jīva who is addicted to objects of senses and pursues them.

1. They are : purity, contentment, penance, study of Vedas and singing the name of the Lord.

2. They are : Non-violence, truthfulness, non-stealing, celibacy and owning no property.

fasting on the Ekādaśī day). For the Supreme Yoga consists of withdrawal of the mind from all (external) things and concentrating on the Paramātmān.

47. Tell me what he has yet to accomplish by giving charitable gifts (and other acts mentioned above), if his mind is perfectly serene and established in the Supreme Self. What good purpose can charitable gifts etc. serve, if one's mind is distracted, uncontrolled and inactive (through sluggishness, etc.)?

48* If the mind is subdued other senses as well as gods presiding over them (automatically) come under control. But the mind is not subjugated by anyone. The mind is thus a formidable deity, who is mightier than the mighty<sup>1</sup> He who can bring the mind under control, is the god of gods.

49. Without conquering the invincible enemy of inexorable force which cuts one to the quick, some persons infatuated (by Māyā) inflict a ruthless war upon other mortals, and make friend of some enemies of others and remain indifferent with still some other persons.

50. The bodies are the creation of the mind (and not real). Identifying themselves with their bodies as "mine" and "I" the people whose intellect (mind) has become blind entertain the false notion that 'this is I', "He is another—other than I", and thus under this misapprehension they wander in the darkness (or Samsāra) which being limitless is difficult to cross.

51. If an individual person is posited to be the cause of

* (i) SS. states that the grace of the Lord is necessary for controlling the mind.

(ii) VR. takes the formidable deity as the Supreme Lord, and interprets : The Supreme Lord, refulgent in his own splendour, should be worshipped by pious acts like charitable gifts, etc. He keeps the mind attracted towards him. He is mightier than the mighty and rules over the gods who are the presiding deities of the senses. They are afraid of him.

1. ŚR quotes a Śruti as follows :

manovāśe sarvaṁ idaṁ babhūva /

nā'nyasya mano vaśam anvīḍya /

bhīṣṇo hi devaḥ sahasaḥ sahyān /

pleasure or pain (experienced by us), the Ātman (who is neither a doer nor an experiencer) has nothing to do with it. That (passive and active) relation (of giving and experiencing pleasure or pain) is between two bodies (of the doer and of the sufferer), which are (after all) made of dust. If a person bites his own tongue with his teeth, with whom should one get angry for the pain.

52. If the presiding deities of our senses be presumed to be the cause of our pain, how is it related with the Ātman (who is unconcerned with it)? For it is with the two organs of the same body) that the modification, viz. giving and receiving pain is concerned. When one limb of a body strikes another limb of the same body, with what part of the body can a man get angry?

53. If (it be argued that) one's own self is the cause (of our joys and sorrows), then the very nature of the soul being responsible (for the pleasure or pain) none else can be the cause. (But even the Ātman cannot be the cause as he is not insane to create trouble for himself). If there is any other cause than the Ātman, it cannot be real (as only the Ātman, the all-pervading Brahman, is real). That being the case, there is neither pleasure nor pain in reality. Where is then the cause to get angry?

54. If it is presumed that planets are the cause of pleasure or pain, planets can affect a body that is born<sup>1</sup>. How are they related to the Ātman who has no birth? Moreover, astrologers state that good or evil planetary influence, affect the planets. But the Ātman is neither the body nor a planet. With whom should the Self flare up?

55. Granted for the sake of argument that Karma is the cause of pleasure and pain. But how does the Ātman come into the picture? Karma is possible when one and the same body

1. ŚR. explains astrologically, when the planets are in the unfavourable houses of the horoscope (the 8th, the 12th, etc.) of a person then they harass him. But this trouble is to the body due to the identification of a presiding deity of a planet with the body. The planets create trouble inter se due to their enmity. But Puruṣa (the Self) is unconcerned as he is neither the body nor a planet.

happens to be both sentient and insentient (for only the insentient can undergo a modification and sentiency is a condition precedent of action). But the material body is non-sentient (and hence incapable of undergoing experience of joy, sorrow, etc.), while the Self is pure sentiency. With whom can he get wroth? For, Karma, the supposed cause of pleasure or pain, does not exist at all.

56. Even if the Time-Spirit (Kāla) be regarded as the cause of one's pleasure and pain, it has no relation with Ātman (as it is a part of Brahman with which the Ātman is identical. It is generally agreed that the whole never troubles its part. For example:) A flame is not destroyed by the fire. (It goes out when its limiting condition viz. fuel, is burnt down), so also the coldness of ice does not deaden with cold its particles<sup>1</sup>. With whom can the Ātman flare up as there is no scope for duality or pairs of opposites in the Supreme (Brahman)?

57. The Ātman is transcendental to prakṛti. Hence no pair of opposites (such as pleasure and pain can be imagined to affect the Paramātmān either through the instrumentality of anything, at any time or place, in any way, as it is possible in the case of Ahaṁkāra (Ego) which is of the nature of (or cause of) Samsāra. One who has realized this, has nothing to fear from created beings.

58. Therefore, basing myself firmly on this conclusive faith in the Supreme Soul which the ancient-most great sages espoused (with careful deliberation), I (a poor recluse as I am) shall get over the uncrossable ocean of darkness (i.e. Samsāra by resorting solely to the feet of Lord Mukunda.

The Lord said:

59. Having lost his wealth, he became disgusted (with Samsāra). Overcoming his feeling of despondency, he became a recluse and wandered all over the world. Though he was ill-

1. VR. puts it a bit differently:

The Ātman being sentient and of intelligent nature cannot be attributed pleasure or pain under the force of Time. If Time is regarded as the cause of the Soul's pleasure or pain, Time must be regarded as the cause of the heat of the fire or the cold of ice (and not their real nature).

treated in this way by wicked people, he remained steadfast to his course of righteous conduct (unflinchingly). The sage sang the following song:

60. "There is no other person (except one's ownself) which causes weal or woe to one's self. This mundane existence consisting as it is, of friends, foes and indifferent persons, is nothing but delusion of the mind caused by darkness (ignorance of the Self)".

61. Therefore, O Uddhava, having concentrated your intellect (mind) firmly in me, make all possible efforts to control your mind. This is, in brief, the entire teaching of Yoga.

62. A person who, with a concentrated mind, muses over, listens to or recounts to others this song of the recluse which teaches the control of the mind with the realization as the Supreme Lord<sup>1</sup>, will not be overpowered by pairs of opposite states like pleasure and pain.

CHAPTER TWENTYFOUR

Elucidation of Sāṃkhya Yoga

1* Now, I shall elucidate to you fully the Sāṃkhya<sup>2</sup> doctrine as definitely and conclusively ascertained by ancient sages (like Kapila and others). Having realized this (philoso-

1. Brahma-niṣṭham Brahmoṭkarṣa-jñāna-pūrvaka-mano-nigraha-lakṣmaṇam /

* ŚR : Though the Supreme Soul is one without a second, all the quality arises through Prakṛti and Puruṣa due to Māyā, and it (the quality) dissolves into him again. A person who realizes this after close enquiry and contemplation, becomes free from the delusion of quality.

2. Sāṃkhya—(i) correct knowledge about the Prakṛti, Puruṣa and Īvara as being distinct from one another—VR.

(ii) Correct knowledge of the Truth ('as it is in reality')—VJ.

(iii) The discriminative knowledge of what is the Soul and the non-Soul—VC.

phy) thoroughly, a man can immediately shed off the illusion<sup>2</sup> (in the form of duality like pleasure-pain, etc.) caused by the erroneous notion of difference (between oneself and others, etc.)

2* In the beginning, during the Pralaya stage (when the universe did not exist and), before the Yuga—period—(began to run its course), in the first Yuga called Kṛta when people were accurate in discriminating between the reality and its semblance or illusion, the seer (or the subjective consciousness) and the totality of the objective existence were identical (one only) undifferentiated substance completely absorbed in Brahman.

3. That entire undifferentiated Reality, viz. the Brahman is beyond the reach of speech and the mind. It (the Brahman) became (as if) dual<sup>2</sup> in the form of Māyā or objective existence and that which is reflected in it, viz. the Jīva.

1. bhrama—The illusion in regarding one's body as the Soul or an absolute being—VR.

Vikalpa—(i) The body and the illusory super-impositions caused thereby—VC.

(ii) Illusions regarding one's body, household, etc.—SD.

vide supra III Chapters 26-27.

* (1) VR : (i) In the Pralaya stage, before the creation of the universe, at the beginning of the creation during the incomparable Kṛta-Yuga (the first Yuga period) and in the case of persons who could discriminate between the triad of the principles called cid, acid and Īśvara, Knowledge i.e. essential nature of the Supreme Soul (Paramātmā) was but one—the total identity between knowledge and its object being absolutely undifferentiated by name and form.

or (ii) Both knowledge (i.e. the essential nature of jīva) and its object (viz. Prakṛti) were entirely one, undifferentiated by name and form.

(2) VJ : At the beginning of the creation, in the Kṛta Yuga knowledge and its object were one (factually real). There was no scope for doubt or mistake in the correct comprehension of the objective reality.

(3) SD : Brahman was possessed of the potencies of Prakṛti, Puruṣa etc. The Jīva (individual soul, the objective reality, Prakṛti were undifferentiated from Brahman as their cause

2. VR. : Assumed two forms viz. Māyā and phala (the final goal) but JG. takes phala as the Prakāśa vīśeṣa of Brahman. According to VJ. : In the

4. Out of the two, one is Prakṛti possessing two aspects<sup>1</sup> (viz. the cause and effect), and the other aspect is Knowledge (Jñāna) and it designated as Puruṣa.

5.* From Prakṛti which was being powerfully agitated by me and by the glance of the Lord in the Puruṣa form (or by the unseen destiny of Jīva), were evolved the guṇas, viz, Sattva, Rajas and Tamas.

6. From the three guṇas was evolved the Sūtra<sup>2</sup>—the first modification characterised by the (cosmic) activity and then (was evolved) the Mahat (The Cosmic intelligence). The Mahat in conjunction with Sūtra underwent modification and Ahaṁkāra (Ego) was evolved therefrom. It deludes the Jīvas.

7. Ahaṁkāra<sup>3</sup> (egotism) is of three types : Sāttvika (or Vaikārika), Rājasa (or Taijasa) and Tāmasa. It is both intelligent and non-intelligent or material by nature and is the cause of Tan-mātrās (the subtle objects, of sound, touch etc.) cognitive senses, conative organs and the mind.

8. From the Tāmasa (type of) Ahaṁkāra, the evolutes of which are the (five) Tanmātrās, came into existence the (five) gross elements (like the sky, air, wind, etc.) From the Taijasa (or Rājasa) type came into being the (ten cognitive and conative) sense-organs. From Vaikṛta (or Sāttvika Ahaṁkāra) were

Kṛta age, knowledge was one with reality and hence pure. In the Tretā age, it became divided and gave rise to doubt and in the Dvāpara age, it developed into perversity.

1. Ubhayātmika : (i) Being of the nature of cause and effect : ŚR.

(ii) EK. Being of a nature of both-ness, one essential Reality constituting of Śiva and Śakti aspects, both of which are non-dual—EB. 24.97-101.

* VJ. uses mythological terminology all through. At the beginning of evolution through me were born out of Lakṣmī, Brahmā (Puruṣa) and Gāyatrī (Prakṛti). Through Lakṣmī and myself, Prakṛti evolved three forms viz. Gāyatrī, Sāvitṛī and Sarasvatī presiding respectively over the guṇas, Tamas, Rajas and Sattva.

2. The concept of Sūtra as an evolute of guṇas and as a predecessor of Mahat is the contribution of the Bh. P. and is not found in the Classical Sāṅkhya. EK. faithfully follows the text of the Bh. P.

3. Though usually translated as 'egotism' which is a later semantic development, its original connotation evades translation. G. J. Larsen (in his classical Sāṅkhya), suggests 'Self-awareness', 'I-ness'. The latter appears to me more appropriate.

evolved the eleven deities<sup>1</sup> (presiding over the sense-organs and the mind).

9. All these principles were impelled by me (with my energy) and were made to work conjointly. They created the egg of the universe which to me—(The Inner Controller of this Vairāja) became an excellent dwelling place.

10. In that egg laid on cosmic waters, I manifested myself (and lay as Nārāyaṇa on the sheet of that water). From my navel sprouted forth a lotus called Viśva (as it was the cause of the universe). And the 'self-born' god Brahmā appeared there (thus Vairāja re-manifested himself as a god with four faces).

11. Endowed with the principle of energy (rajas) and equipped with penance (and knowledge) and through my grace, god Brahmā, the Soul of the universe, created the worlds with their protecting deities, consisting of three regions, viz. Bhūr-loka (the earth with seven subterranean regions like Atala Vitala and others), Bhuvar-loka (the aerial region above the earth) and Svar-loka (consisting of Mahar, Jana, Tapas and Satya lokas)

12. Svar-loka or heaven is the abode of gods. Bhūloka (the terrestrial globe) that of all mortal beings including men. Beyond these three regions (in maharloka, Janaloka, etc.) lies the abode of Siddhas.

13. Below our sphere of the earth, god Brahmā created the subterranean regions (known as Atala, Vitala, etc.) as the abodes of Asuras and Nāgas. All the fruits of karmas performed by those who are under the influence of three guṇas are enjoyed in the (above-mentioned) three spheres.

14. Mahar-loka, Jana-loka and Tapo-loka are regions free from all impurities. These are the destinations of those who practice Yoga, perform austerities or become sannyāsins. But my region, Vaikuṇṭha is the destination of those who practice the Yoga of devotion (Bhakti).

1. ŚR. enumerates them as follows : Deities presiding over quarters, the wind-god, the Sun-god, Pracetas (Varuṇa), two Aśvinikumāras, the Fire god Indra, Upendra (God Viṣṇu), Mitra (Prajāpati) and the Moon-god. They are refulgent with their splendour and hence called devas (Prakāśa-svabhāḥāt).

15.* By me, the Almighty creator in the form of time-spirit which apportions the fruits of Karmas, this world which is bound up with karmas, is made to go up (to Satya-loka) or down to the insentient stage in this stream of guṇas (according to the nature of Karmas done by these beings).

16. All beings (or objects) whether minute or big, thin or stout which are in existence, are constituted by the pair, Prakṛti and Puruṣa.

17. Whatever forms the beginning as well as the end of a thing, certainly constitutes its middle also. It is the real entity (as it pervades all the states). Modifications have been only perceptual and of practical nature, as the ornaments are of gold or pots, of the earth.

18. The real entity at the basis of the product is that which the earlier existence adopts as the material to evolve the latter existence or that which is, in a given case, considered to be the beginning and the end of a certain effect.

19. Prakṛti is the material cause of what is regarded as sat (real existence from the practical point of view or mentioned in the previous verse). The Supreme Person is its support (presiding authority). And the Time-Spirit is the revealer of it (which does so by disturbing the equilibrium of guṇas). And I, the Brahman, constitute this triad (of Prakṛti, Puruṣa and Kāla).

20.** (He proves the reality of Brahman due to his persistence before, during and after the existence of the universe—). As long as my glance (the Divine Will) is there, this enormous process of creation proceeds in due order from cause to effect (or father to son) continuously. It continues for the enjoyment of the jīva (who, due to the influence of three guṇas takes birth in various species for enjoying the fruits of his Kar-

*. ŚR. : All destinations except the Lord's region Vaikuṇṭha, are of short duration. A jīva can rest eternally in Vaikuṇṭha. One should give up the path of Karma and take to Bhaktiyoga. The verse thus preaches renunciation.

** VR. The creation of the universe consisting of categories like Mahat and others, continues to proceed while I will it. The universe has two aspects—intelligent (cid) and Non-intelligent (acid) and is invested with three guṇas. As I will it, the universe exists and gets dissolved.

mas) upto the end of the universe (till the glance of the Lord lasts).

21.* This universe (virāṭ) in which the creation (subsistence) and dissolution of the worlds (along with creatures inhabiting them) take place is pervaded by me. It (with all the fourteen spheres—bhuvanas arranged in it) becomes eligible for dissolution into its five components (the elements).

22.** (Here the process of involution of the universe is described).

(At the time of the dissolution of the universe due to a severe drought of one hundred years) the (bodies of) the mortal(creation) are withdrawn into the food, and the food, into the food-grains, the seeds, into the earth (which being burnt down by the solar heat from above and the poison-fire of Saṅkarṣaṇa from below) is reduced to its subtle state of smell.

23. Smell gets absorbed into waters and the waters into its essential characteristic Rasa (taste). Rasa gets dissolved into the (elemental) fire or light which (in its turn) is merged into (its essential characteristic) colour.

24. Colour is withdrawn into the element—air which is reduced to its essential property Touch. Touch gets dissolved into the ether (sky) which is reduced to its subtle state sound. The cognitive senses and conative organs get merged into their own sources (viz. their presiding deities like the Sun, Indra, Varuṇa etc.)

25. The causes (or deities presiding over senses) get dissolved into their controller; the mind along with the deities gets merged into Sāttvika Ahaṁkāra. Sound (the essential characteristic of the ether) is dissolved into Tāmasa Ahaṁkāra and that powerful Ahaṁkāra (which includes Sāttvika, Rājasa and Tāmasa types) is withdrawn into Mahat.

26. That great and mighty principle Mahat (which possesses the potencies of knowledge and actions) highly * VR : When I, through Time, will like to destroy the Brahmāṇḍa consisting of various bhuvanas or spheres for the enjoyment of jīvas, it becomes fit to disintegrate into five (gross) elements.

** VJ. states that here the categories and their presiding deities are spoken of in the same words. (We should understand that) the deity presiding over food—is absorbed in the deity presiding over seeds or food grains.

endowed as it is with guṇas is withdrawn into its cause the three guṇas which in turn get dissolved into the Unmanifest (Prakṛti) And that Unmanifest Prakṛti becomes merged with the Time-Spirit which has ceased to function.

27. The (operation-less) Time-Spirit becomes one with the jīva, the Maker of the Universe who directs Māyā (and is full of knowledge. The jīva gets integrated with me, the birthless (eternal) Ātman. The absolute Ātman who is to be inferred from the process of evolution and involution of the universe abides (eternally) by himself.

28. How can any illusion or misapprehension caused by the (wrong) notion of difference, arise at all in the mind of a person who makes searching enquiries about the Ātman and how can any misconception (if arisen at all) continue (to linger) just as darkness would, after the rise of the Sun in the sky ?

29. This is the process known as Sāṃkhya. This (differentiation between what is Ātman and what is Not-Ātman) cuts the knots of all doubts in one's heart. This has been explained to you by me. The omniscient one knows all things great and small, or he knows the truth about cause and effect or the past, present and future, from the point of evolution and involution.

CHAPTER TWENTY FIVE

The Three Guṇas and Their Workings

The Lord said:

1. Now listen to me attentively as I explain to you, O excellent person, how guṇas when unmixed with each other (and acting in that pure state), affect severally the behaviour of a human being.

2. The effects of Sattva are: Control of the mind and that of senses, forbearance, discrimination, observance of one's religious duties or penance, truthfulness, mercy, memory

(or prompt remembrance of Śāstric teaching), contentment, renunciation, non-covetousness, faith, avoidance of unbecoming acts (not even looking at them), charity, straightforwardness, modesty, and satisfaction in the bliss of the Self.

3. The effects of Rajas are: Lust after sensual pleasures, activity, arrogance, insatiable greed, pride, seeking heavenly blessings for prosperity, the sense of differentiation (between oneself and others), voluptuousness, quarrel-mongering, liking for self-praise, affection, ridiculing others, show of power, hard exertions through power.

4. The effects of Tamas are: Intolerance, miserliness, deceitfulness, violence, begging, hypocrisy, langour, quarrelsomeness, sorrow, delusion, despondency, stupour, expectation, fear and indolence.

5. These are the effects of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas respectively. These are exhaustively enumerated by me. Now listen from me the effects of their combinations.

6. The expression of the notions 'I am' and 'Mine is' etc. is the effect of the combination of guṇas. Whatever act is done by the mind, objects of senses, the senses and the vital breath—all these transactions (in life) are the combinations of these guṇas<sup>1</sup>.

7. When a person is enthusiastically working to attain (the three puruṣārthas) viz. Dharma, Artha and Kāma, each of such pursuits is a combination of three guṇas and they are conducive to the creation of faith (about Dharma) or attainment of wealth and satisfaction of sense-pleasures (which are Sāttvika, Tāmasa and Rājasa respectively).

8. If a person is deeply attached to activities characterised by Pravṛtti (this-worldly-ness) and is intensely attached to the house-holder's life, and performs righteous duties (prescribed for his stage of life), there is a combination of guṇas (as attachment to household is Tāmasa, his worldly pravṛtti is Rājasa while righteous duties are Sāttvika)

1. ŚR explains : When we say "I am quiescent, passionate or irascible" or that "These qualities (quiescence, passionateness) are mine", it expresses the idea of mine-ness—which is due to the mixture of these guṇas. The mind is Sāttvika, bhūtas (elements) are Tāmasa, while sense-organs are Rājasa. Naturally when an act involving the use of or working of the mind, senses, sense-objects and the vital breath takes place (as normally all acts are so involved), they become the product of the combination of guṇas.

9. From (a person's) self-control and other qualities, it may be inferred that he is endowed (mainly) with Sattva-guṇa; from his inclination to lust and such other qualities, the person is dominated by Rajo-guṇa and from (passions like) anger (avarice etc.), it should be inferred that he is possessed with Tamo-guṇa.

10. But when, without expecting anything in return, a person resorts to me (and worships me), through the duties prescribed for him by Śāstras and adores me with devotion, one should know that person to be of Sāttvic nature—the same holds good in the case of women.

11. When with expectation of securing worldly pleasures a person worships me through (performance) of righteous duties prescribed for him by Śāstras, it should be understood that he is Rajasika by nature; but when he does so with a desire to cause injury to others (his enemies, etc.), one should know that he is Tāmasika by nature.

12. The guṇas—Sattva, Rajas and Tamas—affect the Jīva (individual Soul), and (as such) they have no concern with me. They are engendered in the mind of the Jīvas. A person who is attached to bhūtas (i.e. the worldly objects which are products of bhūtas) is bound down by them to Samsāra.

13. When the illuminating, pure and auspicious quality of Sattva domineers over the other two, then a man is happily united with righteous tendencies, spiritual knowledge and other qualities.

14. When Rajas from which spring attachment, notion of difference and which drives one to activities triumphs over the two (other) guṇas, a person becomes restive and unhappy, indulges in activities and aspires after fame and wealth.

15. When Tamas which stupefies discretion, obscures one's vision and renders one dull, overpowers both the Sattva and Rajas, a person suffers from grief and delusion, becomes sleepish and becomes harmful and beggarly enough to expect help from others.

16. When the mind becomes serene, senses quiescent and averse to their objects, and there is fearlessness about the body, and the mind feels no attachment for anything, you can be sure that there is Sattva-guṇa which leads to my state.

17. When the mind gets agitated through passionate activity and his intellect (judgment) gets distracted, his senses are restless, the organs of action have no ease and the mind is in confused state, know that it is the dominance of Rajo guṇa.

18. When the faculty of understanding fails and the mind becomes powerless to grasp the objects and drooping its activities (temporarily) ceases to function, and when darkness (ignorance) and despondency prevail, know that it is the dominance of Tamo-guṇa.

19. When the Sattva-guṇa is in ascendance, the power of gods increases, when the strength of Rajo-guṇa enhances, the power of Asuras becomes dominant and when the Tamo-guṇa grows in strength, the Rākṣasas grow in strength, O Uddhava<sup>1</sup>.

20. One should regard the working state of beings due to Sattva-guṇa, dream state due to Rajas and deep sleep due to Tamoguṇa. The fourth state which is the Ātman itself should be regarded persistent through all the previous three stages.

21. The Brāhmaṇas i.e. persons who follow the course of righteous duties prescribed in the Vedas, through the dominance of Sattvagūṇa go higher and higher up upto Brahma Loka, but with overwhelming Tamoguṇa, they go down lower and lower to state of immovables. And in between these two states shuttle the human beings due to Rajo-guṇa.

22. Persons at the time of whose death Sattvagūṇa is predominant, go to the celestial world. Those who give up the ghost while Rajoguṇa is ascendant, return to human world. Those who depart from the body while the Tamoguṇa is powerful, go to hell. While those who are above these three guṇas (even while they are alive), come to me (and merge).

23. The course of righteous duties prescribed by the Sāstras (irrespective of their nature as obligatory or occasional), if performed and dedicated to me or without any expectation in return from it, is Sāttvic; that which is done with some expectation of fruit is Rājasa. And the act done with some vindictive (harmful) (or hypocritical or jealous) motive is Tāmasa.

1. ŚR explains : Here the senses which tend toward Nivṛtti, Pravṛtti and delusion are respectively regarded as of the form of gods. Asuras and Rākṣasas.

24. Knowledge that tries to cognize nothing but the Ātman (excluding all other objects) is Sāttvika; that which comprehends the Self along with its conditioning body is Rājasic; knowledge of the uncultured (such as ignorant children, the physically handicapped) is Tāmasic, while knowledge that concerns me only transcends all the three guṇas.

25. Residence in forests is regarded as Sāttvika; dwelling in a village or a town is Rājasa; while staying in gamble houses is Tāmasa. Dwelling in my shrine is above these three guṇas.

26. A doer of an action who is not attached to and expecting any fruit in return is called a Sāttvika agent. One who has become blind with attachment (for the fruit of an action in return) is remembered a Rājasic agent, while he who has lost his discrimination between what is right and wrong (but still does it) is called the Tāmasic agent. But a person who entirely depends on me is an agent who transcends the guṇas.

27. Faith in Ātman as taught in the Śāstras is Sāttvika, that in ritualistic acts and other duties prescribed in the Vedas is Rājasa. Faith in unrighteous acts as righteousness is Tāmasa while that in my service (worship, meditation, etc.) is beyond the influence of all guṇas.

28. Food that is nourishing, wholesome and obtained without exertions is Sāttvika; that which caters to the taste (and is palatable) is Rājasa, while that which is impure, nauseating and causing some disease is Tāmasa.

29. Happiness which is felt in (the realization of) the Self is Sāttvika; that which arises from the objects of senses is Rājasa: pleasure that comes through delusion and low taste is Tāmasa. But the spiritual bliss arising from realizing me transcends the three guṇas.

30. Thus three guṇas constitute everything such as substance (e.g. food in verse 28 above), place of residence (vide verse 25), fruit (verse 29), time(verse 13-16), knowledge (verse 24) the act (verse 23), the doer (verse 26), faith (verse 27), state of consciousness (verse 20), form of existence (verse 21) and final destination (verse 22).

31. Whatever is seen, heard or contemplated by the intelligence—in fact all entities which are pervaded by Puruṣa and Prakṛti, are the products of three guṇas, O prominent person (lit. O bull among men).

32. All these transmigrations of a person (i.e. of his Soul) are caused by these guṇas and his actions. The individual (Soul) by whom these guṇas which are engendered in the mind are completely subdued and who, by means of the Bhakti-yoga (path of devotion), is firmly established in devotion to me, becomes eligible for my state i.e. final emancipation, O gentle Uddhava.

33. Therefore, having fortunately obtained this (human) body which is eligible to attain both jñāna (knowledge) and Vijñāna (Realization of the Self), a wise and intelligent person should thoroughly shed off their attachment to guṇas and seek resort in me by worshipping me.

34. Therefore, free from attachment to sense-objects and with his senses brought under control, a wise person should worship me devoutly and with alertness. Concentrating his mind on me, he should discomfit Rajas and Tamas by developing the Sattva guṇa.

35. Becoming a contemplationist, he should subdue Rajas and Tamas by cultivating the Sattva guṇa and by strengthening himself by desirelessness, he should bring Sattva also under control. Freeing himself from guṇa, the jīva should shed off the subtle body (the cause of his jīva-hood) and attain to me.

36. The individual Soul (Jīva) who is thus emancipated from his subtle body (or Jīva-hood) and also from guṇas arising in the mind, becomes permeated with my presence (i.e. becomes one with Para Brahman), and the Jīva does not go out for enjoyment of external objects nor turns inward for enjoying them mentally. (He is liberated while alive in this birth).

CHAPTER TWENTYSIXThe Song of Aila (Purūravas)*

The Lord said:

1. He who having obtained this human body (existence) capable of perceiving my real nature, and having adopted the path of devotion so pleasing to me, duly attains to me who am Supreme Bliss and the Supreme Soul abiding in his heart.

2. Emancipated completely by dint of his knowledge from the ġiva-hood constituted of guṇas, and though living in the midst of objects of senses which are unreal, he does not get attached to them, as they are created by (and hence dependent upon) Māyā (and as such) are perceived falsely.

3. One should never associate oneself with unworthy persons who seek to satiate their hunger and gratify their sexual desire. For like a blind man following another blind person, the followers of such sensualists fall into blinding darkness.

4. Emperor Purūravas<sup>1</sup>, the son of Ilā, who was well-known far and wide, became mad due to his separation from Urvaśī. When he regained his normalcy and decided to resign, he sang the following song:

5. As Urvaśī forsook him, the king lamented loudly and like a mad person, unaware of his nudity, followed her crying, "Wait, O cruel wife, do stop".

6. His mind being completely fascinated by Urvaśī, he enjoyed trivial pleasures through nights year after year and remained unsated. He was not aware of the years that passed away nor those coming in.

Aila (Purūravas) said:

7. Alas ! How terrifically vast is the extent of my infatuation ! My mind has been soiled (and spoilt) by my libidinousness. I was not even aware of the loss of (the major part of) my life, while my neck was being clasped by the queen (Urvaśī).

1. For the legend of Purūravas vide Supra IX. 14.32-47.

8. Hypnotized by her, I could not know when the sun arose or set. What I pity, that being enamoured of her, I was unaware how days amounting to a number of years just flitted away.

9. What a shocking self-delusion ! I, the sovereign ruler of the world, the crest-jewel of kings, was made a pet-deer of women.

10. The woman who spurned me (contemptuously) like a blade of straw even though I was a ruler with royal grandeur (and paraphernalia). And I, weeping like a madman, went after her in nakedness.

11. What majestic lustre, power or Lordship could there be in me, who like a donkey kicked (by a she-donkey) followed the woman as she deserted me.

12. What is the value of that learning, penance, liberality, scriptural scholarship, resort to solitude or observance of silence in a man who has lost his heart to women.

13. Fie upon me ! A fool who, though impervious to his self-interest, fancy myself to be a learned man and who, even after being installed as a sovereign ruler, was subdued and roped like a bull or a donkey by women.

14. Although I had been enjoying the intoxicating nectar of the lips of Urvaśī for years together, my inborn lust for her is not satiated, like fire fed with oblations (of ghee)<sup>1</sup>.

15. Who else than the glorious Lord Viṣṇu, the Lord of those who revel in the spiritual bliss of the Soul, is capable to deliver my mind from (the clutches) of a wench who captivated it.

16. Even though I was advised by the queen (Urvaśī) in well-argued speech (recorded in a Vedic Sūkta) the deep infatuation entrenched in my mind does not disappear, as I, being perverse-minded, had not controlled my mind.

17. What offence has been committed by her against me ? Or what wrong can be attributed to a rope against a person who, not knowing its real nature, mistook it for a ser-

1. The famous verse attributed to King Yayāti in MBH Ādi. 85.12.

nājātu kāmāḥ kāmānām upabhogena sāmyati / haviṣā kṛṣṇa-vartmā bhūya eva'bhivardhate //

pent ? It is I who could not subdue my senses, am responsible (for this tragedy).

18. What a lot of difference there is between a (woman's or a human) body full of dirt, stinking with bad odour and impure and the attributes of being like a flower (clean, sweet-smelling, pure). But these attributes are superimposed on it (a woman's body) through Nescience.

19. It cannot be definitely determined whether this human body belongs to parents (who procreated it), or to the wife (one's life-partner), or to the employer, or to the fire (which ultimately consumes it) or to dogs and vultures (in case it is not cremated but lies unclaimed) or whether it belongs to the Soul (who abides in it) or to friends and well-wishers ?

20. What a pity that a man should be fascinated with this disgusting body which disintegrates into worms (if interred), faeces (if eaten by carnivorous animals), and ashes (if cremated), and appreciates it as a beautiful feminine countenance with shapely nose, beaming with charming smiles.

21. What difference is there between people like me who enjoy pleasure in a feminine body which is nothing but an accumulation of skin, flesh, blood, nerves, fat, marrow and bones and worms who enjoy themselves in feces, urine and pus.

22. A person knowing his personal interest, should under no circumstances associate himself with women or persons addicted to women; for the mind gets agitated only when there is a contact between objects of senses and senses and not otherwise.

23. A thing that is not spoken about, seen or heard creates no passion or desire for it. A person who does not direct his life-breath (mind or sense-organs to external objects), gets his mind steady and serene.

24. Therefore, one should not associate with women or women addicts through the medium of senses. For the group of six (internal) enemies (like lust, anger, greed and others) cannot be trusted even in the case of wise people. What need be said of (ignorant) persons like me ?

The Lord resumed:

25. Singing loudly the song (of his life) in this way, Purūravas, the King of the Kings, left the realm of Urvaśī. He realized me as his own self, and having shaken off delusion by virtue of this knowledge, he retired from worldly life.

26. Therefore, an intelligent person should dissociate himself from evil company, and associate himself with the saintly people; for it is these pious saints who would cut off his deep attachment (to sense-objects) by their wise precepts.

27. The saints devote their minds to me without expecting anything in return. Being desireless, they are serene, viewing all beings as equals (as they are none else but Brahman). They have superseded the notions of mine-ness and I-ness (i.e. identification of the Soul with the body). They are not affected by the pair of opposites (like joy and sorrow, pleasure and pain) and are perfect have-nots (property-less).

28. It is in the company of these supremely fortunate persons, O highly blessed Uddhava, that my legends are told and these stories absolve the listeners from all sins.

29. Those persons who listen to these (my) stories, extol them in songs, devoutly appreciate them and are devoted to me with faith and reverence, get devotion engendered in them.

30. What else remains to be achieved by the saints who attained real devotion towards me, the Brahman, who am endowed with infinite qualities and potencies and who am conscious blissfulness incarnate.

31. Just as cold, fear (of darkness) and darkness fly away from a person who resorts to the fire, similarly, those who wait upon and worship saints, become free from fear, ignorance and apathy.

32. Even as a strong boat is to those who are drowning in the sea, saints, serene-minded knowers of the Brahman are the best life-savers to those who are tossed about and are drowning in the sea of Samsāra.

33. Just as food is the very life of living beings, I am the shelter to the afflicted. Righteousness (pious acts) is the wealth (investment) in the other world, the saints are the support (resort) of those who are afraid of repeated transmigration of the Soul in future.

34. The saints confer the (inner) vision (of the Brahman) on those who associate with them, even as the sun bestows the external eye (to see nature). Saints are deities, the near and dear relatives, the very soul, nay they are even myself.

35. It is traditionally recounted that Purūravas who divested himself of all longing for the realm of Urvaśī (and pleasures in her company); renounced all attachment, and revelling in the spiritual bliss of the Ātman, went about all over the world.

CHAPTER TWENTYSEVEN

The Yoga of Active Service

Uddhava said:

1. Be pleased to explain to me the Yoga of active service (Kriyā-Yoga) consisting of the propitiation of your worship, O Lord! What type of votaries worship you? With what motive do they propitiate you? What is the procedure of their worship, O Lord of Sāttvatas.

2. Sages like Nārada, the worshipful Vyāsa and Bṛhaspati, the son of Aṅgiras, the preceptor (of gods), have repeatedly asserted that this course is conducive to the Final Beatitude to men.

3. The teaching that was issued from your lotus-mouth was the same which the glorious unborn god Brahmā communicated to his sons of whom Bhṛgu was the chief, and also what god Śiva imparted to his divine consort Pārvatī.

4. That teaching is approved as meritorious to persons belonging to all castes (Varṇas) and stages in life (Āśramas) I believe it is the best course conducive to emancipation from Samsāra even for women and Śūdras.

5. O Lord with eyes like lotus-petals! Be pleased to elucidate that course which unties the bondage of Karma (permanently) to me who am your beloved devotee, O Lord of the masters of this universe (the Trinity of gods—Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Rudra).

The Lord replied:

6. Limitless is the Karma-kāṇḍa (as courses and practices of ritualistic worship of the Lord are infinite). I shall, however, describe that to you succinctly and in proper sequence.

7. My worship is threefold—Vedic, Tāntric and a synthesis of these two. But of these three modes, one should offer me worship according to the method of his choice (and suitability).

8. Learn from me the method how a person, having attained the status of a twice-born when he is invested with a sacred thread according to the injunctions laid down in the Vedas, should worship me, with faith and devotion.

9. With sincere devotion and without any fraudulent motive (of expecting some fruit or ulterior objective in return), a person should worship me, the preceptor (or the father of world) with the articles of worship (by offering these to me) through the medium of an image or an altar of a sacrifice or the fire or the Sun or the waters or (image enthroned in) his heart or of a Brāhmaṇa.

10. For bodily cleanliness, he should first brush his teeth and take his bath. While bathing he should use earth (and other materials) for washing, muttering all the while Vedic and Tāntric mantras (sacred formulae).

11. After the performance of the Twilight prayer (Sandhyā, Brahmajajña, etc.) and other duties which have been enjoined by me through the Veda, he should, with a pure, solemn determination (of propitiating me) perform my worship which sanctifies (i.e. relieves one from the bondage of) karmas.

12. An image is said to be of eight kinds: It may be made of stone or of wood or of metals (like gold, silver, etc.) or of earth or of sandal paste or may be a painting (on the wall) or of sand or a mental image or made of a precious stone.

13. An image which is the shrine of the Lord, is of two kinds—movable (e.g. a Śālagrāma pebble) or immovable.

While adoring an immovable image, āvāhana (invoking the presence of the deity) and udvāsa (or visarjana, a farewell to the deity) are not necessary, O Uddhava.

14. In worshipping a movable image, one can exercise a choice whether invoking and evoking of the deity in the image should be done. But in the case of an altar of sacrifice both must be done. If the image be not of earth (or sandal-paste) or a painted picture, it may be bathed, but in the case of other material, it should be sprinkled with water.

15. My worship through the medium of images should be performed with excellent articles. But a sincere (guileless) devotee may worship me with whatever articles are available to him. In the case of worshipping me in the mind, it should be done with articles created by the mind with utmost devotion.

16. Bathing and decorating an image pleases me the most, O Uddhava. In the case of an altar, invocation of the specific deities at their respective places by means of mantras is desirable (or placement of twentyfive Tattvas—categories or principles by uttering twentyfive letters from ka to ma). In the case of sacred fire, oblations with ghee be offered.

17. In the Sun-god, worship with Arghya (respectful offering of water and other articles of reception) and prayers is the most pleasing to me; and in water, with libations of water and flower, etc. Even if mere water is offered with faith and devotion by my votary, it gives me the highest pleasure.

18. What need be said if sandal-paste, incense, flowers, lamp, food, etc. are presented to me as offerings. On the contrary, even if rich gifts in abundance be offered to me, by a non-devotee, it does not contribute to my pleasure and joy.

19. Purifying oneself (by taking a bath) and collecting together all the requisite articles of worship, seated on a seat of Darbha-grass with the Darbha's pointing to the east, one should face the East or the North or face the image of the god, if it was immovable.

20. Consecrating his person by Nyāsa (which consists of assignment of the various parts of the body to different deities accompanied with prayers and corresponding gesticulations) and the respective parts of the image, he should touch it with his hand and clean it (by removing sandal-paste, flowers etc. of the previous worship) and should also duly consecrate the pitcher (kalāṣa) containing water for bathing the deity and other vessels for sprinkling water.

21. He should sprinkle that consecrated water from the Kalāṣa) and sanctify the shrine of the deity, the articles of worship and one's own person and also fill the three vessels with water and articles of worship<sup>1</sup>.

22. The worshipper should consecrate the three vessels containing water for washing the feet (pādya), hands (Arghya) and sipping (Ācamana) of the deity, with the Mantras<sup>2</sup> called Hṛdaya (heart), śiṛṣan (head) and śikhā (Tuft of hair on the head) respectively, and then pronounce the Gāyatri Mantra<sup>3</sup> over them all.

23. One should contemplate on my transcendental atomic (subtle) aṁśa (part) of Paramātman which abides in the 'Lotus' of the heart in one's body, which is dried up by the (gastric) wind, and parched up with fire at the Ādhāra cakra (a spiritual nerve-plexus presumed to be located at the navel), but revived by the sprinkling of nectar issuing from the moon located in the forehead. It is beyond the 'un-struck' (spiritual) sound (anāhata nāda) which is the fifth part of Praṇava (the remaining four being A, U, M, Bindu or nasal sound) and it

1. ŚR. gives the following details. The three vessels with water are meant for washing the feet (pādya), hands (arghya) and for sipping (ācamaniya) water for the deity. The water for washing the feet of the deity should contain small grains of Śyāmāka rice, blades of Dūrvā grass, lotus flower and a herb called Viṣṇukrānta or Aparājita. The water for washing the hands of the deity should contain the following eight articles : sandal-paste, flowers, unbroken grains of rice (akṣata), of barley, blades of Kuśa grass, sesamum seeds, mustard seeds and blades of Dūrvā grass. The water for sipping or rinsing the deities' mouth should contain nutmegs, cloves, berries called Kakkola or Kankola. The list is commonly given by all commentators with a few additions. SD. states that if any article is wanting Tulasi leaves should be substituted.

2. GS. gives them as follows :

hṛdā namaḥ, śiṛṣṇā svāhā, and śikhāyai vaṣaṭ.

3. It is as follows :

tat-savitur vareṇyam bhargodevasya dhīmahi dhiyo yo nah praodaya is meditated upon by Siddhas (who have attained spiritual perfection).

24. When his own body is permeated by that divine particle (aṁśa) or contemplated as his ātman (like a house illumined by the light emanated from a lamp, the worshipper should be (himself) full of my presence and invoke me and worship me with mentally created articles. He should then invoke my presence in the image (to be worshipped), perform the Nyāsa (assigning the various syllables of the Mantras to the part of its body) and then adore me that way.

25-26. After constructing mentally a throne<sup>1</sup> (seat) for me, and with the nine powers<sup>2</sup> attending upon it, he should conceive that there is (on the seat-cover designed over it) a shining lotus of eight petals beautified with a pericarp and filaments. With a view to secure success here and emancipation from samsāra hereafter, he should, according to Vedic and Tāntric procedure of worship, offer me water for washing feet (pādya), washing hands and rinsing the mouth.

27. He should duly worship in the serial order the discus the Sudarśana, the conch Pāñcajanya, the mace Kaumodaki, the sword Nandaka, the bow Śārṅga as well as the arms of San̥karṣaṇa, viz. the plough and the pestle, in the eight quarters and the Kaustubha gem, the Vaijayanti garland and the śrivatsa mark (all the three on the chest of the Lord in their respective places).

28. Similarly, he should worship the eight attendants (Pārṣads) of the Lord, viz. Nanda, Sunanda, Pracanda, Caṇḍa as well as Mahābala, Bala, Kumuda and Kumudekṣaṇa,

1. ŚR. gives the following concept of this seat. It has Dharma or Righteousness, Jñāna or Knowledge, Vairāgya or Renunciation and Aiśvarya or Rulership as its legs in the South-east, South-west, North-west and North-east corners and the opposites of the above viz. Unrighteousness, Ignorance, Attachment and lack of rulership as its four sides and the three guṇas—Sattva, Rajas and Tamas as the planks at the base.

2. ŚR. enumerates the following nine potencies of the Lord, Vimalā—purity, Utkarṣiṇī—exalted state, Jñāna—Knowledge, Kriyā—activity, Yoga—Yogic Supernormal powers, Prahvā—modesty, Satyā—truthfulness, Isāndā—Sovereignty and Anugraha—Grace.

standing around the Lord in eight directions and Garuḍa facing Him in front.

29. He should also adore by the usual offering of water to wash hand, etc., Durgā, Vināyaka, the sage Vyāsa and Viṣvak-sena (all these surrounding the Lord in the four corners), His own spiritual guide (standing to the left of the God), and the guardian deities of the eight quarters, each in his respective position, all of them facing the Lord.

30. If he can financially afford to do so, he should every day give me (and my attendants) bath with water fragrant with sandal paste, Uśira (a fragrant root of the plant Andropogon Muricatus), camphor, saffron and aloe-wood chanting all the while Mantras during the bath.

31. He should chant (while bathing the deity) the svaṇagharmānuvāka (the section of the Taittiriya Āraṇyaka beginning with the mantra: suvarṇam gharmam pariveda venam (T. A. 3. 11. 1a) the Mahāpuruṣa Vidyā<sup>1</sup>, the Puruṣa sūkta (RV. X. 90) and texts of the Sāmaveda known as Rājan-sāma<sup>2</sup> (and Rauhiṇa sāma).

32. My votary should lovingly decorate me appropriately with clothes, sacred thread, ornaments, decorative drawings on my body (on cheeks, chest, etc.), garlands of Tulasi leaves and sandal pigments.

33. My worshipper should offer to me with faith and reverence various articles (of worship) such as water for washing feet and rinsing the mouth (for sipping), sandal-paste, flowers, Akṣatas (grains of unbroken rice), scented fumes, light and articles of food.

34. If he can afford it financially, sugar and milk preparations, ghee and butter, cakes, pastes and sweet-meats,

1. It contains the following Mantra :

jitam te puṇḍarikākṣa namaste viśva-bhāvana /
Subrahmaṇya namste'stu mahāpuruṣa-pūrvaja //

2. It begins thus :

Indraṁ nara nemadhita havante

RV. 7.27.1a, TS. 1.6.12.1a, SV 1.318a

porridge made of wheat flour with ghee and raw sugar, curds and soup of pulses should be offered to me.

35. Every day or (if that is not possible due to financial stringency) at least on holy days (like the eleventh day both in the bright and dark half of the month, etc.) or in the birthday celebrations of the incarnations of God, perfumed oil, paste of saffron and camphor (for massaging my body), a mirror (to show me my reflection), tooth brush for cleansing the teeth, bathing with pañcāmṛtas or five articles like milk, curds, ghee, honey and sugar, to be finally washed clean with pure fresh water), sweet food for eating should be offered to me and music and dance should be presented on these days.

36. (To those who wish a higher type of fruit, worship of sacrificial fire is recommended as follows: A sacrificial receptacle sufficiently hollow in the middle prepared as per prescribed rules, in the earth along with three zone-like constructions and platforms around it be prepared and fire be deposited in it and when sufficiently kindled, he should collect it with his hand.

37-38. After spreading the Kuśa grass on all sides (as per usual procedure), he should sprinkle water on all the four sides of the receptacle of fire and after performing the procedure of Anvādhāna (depositing fuel<sup>1</sup> and other things in the sacred fire), the worshipper should contemplate me in the fire, as being brilliant in complexion like red-hot molten gold, with four beautiful arms equipped with a conch, a discus, a mace and a lotus, gracious and serene in appearance, clad in raiments of golden colour like pollens of a lotus flower.

39. (He should contemplate me as) adorned with a lustrous crown, with bracelets and a girdle and excellent armlets; with śrivatsa mark on the chest, and shining Kaustubha gem (round the neck), and a garland of forest flowers (Vanamālā)

40. Having contemplated me (as such), he should offer the sacrificial sticks soaked in ghee into the fire. He should then pour into the fire two offerings of ghee specifically called Āghāra<sup>1</sup> and ājyabhāga<sup>2</sup> and should offer other oblations soaked in ghee.

1. The sacred fuel and articles to be offered are to be placed to the north of the fire. They are to be sprinkled with consecrated water taken in a spoon before offering them to the fire.

41. A wise person (knower of these technicalities) should pour the offerings into the fire, uttering the fundamental Mantra<sup>3</sup> (Om namo Nārāyaṇāya) and some portion of the oblations with each of the sixteen verses of puruṣa sūkta. He should then give oblations (through the sacrificial fire) to Dharma and other gods according to the sequence given above (vide verse 25 above), uttering the name of the deity (in the Dative case and adding the word Ṣvāhā every time. Finally, at the end of the sacrifice a thanks-giving oblation to fire with the Mantra Agnaye viṣṭakṛte svāhā is to be offered.

42. Having worshipped me and paying me obeisance, he should offer worship to the attendant deities (Nanda, Sunanda, etc.) muttering all the while the Mūla Mantra (Om namo Nārāyaṇāya) meditating on the Supreme Brahman, viz. Nārāyaṇa.

43. Having offered water for sipping, he should hand over the remnants to viṣvaksena. Then he should offer betel leaves containing spices and aromatic substances making the mouth sweetsmelling. He should conclude by mantra-puṣpa (showering flowers on me).

44. After singing and extolling my excellences, dancing before me, imitating my past līlās (sportive actions), recounting and listening to my stories, he should remain immersed in that blissful state for a while.

45. Eulogizing me by singing various hymns found in ancient texts as well as those in the current language (of the masses), he should lay himself prostrate before me with the prayer, "may you be propitious unto me, O Lord."

1. In this, ghee is to be sprinkled across the sacrificial pit from the north to the south and vice versa, muttering the sacred formulae prajāpataye Svāhā, Indrāya Svāhā.

2. Offering ghee to the sacrificial fire uttering the sacred formulas Agnaye Svāhā, Somāya Svāhā.

3. This being the Pāñcarātra Sādhana, they won't use the mantra Om Namō Vāsudevāya, though some modern commentators do so.

46. Placing his head on my feet and clasping them (my feet) by both of his hands (he should pray) "protect me, O Lord. Afraid of the sea of samsāra full of alligators in the form of death, I have sought protection in you."

47. He should then reverentially place on his head some flowers, etc. from my worship as a gracious gift from me. If withdrawing of the spiritual light invoked in the image is necessary, he should contemplate that the divine light in the image is now withdrawn and merged in the Supreme Light in the lotus of his heart.

48. One may worship me at any time and in any form (image, picture, etc.), in which one entertains devout faith. For being the Soul (Inner Controller) of all I abide in all beings as well as in the Self of the worshipper.

49. He who worships in the manner described above, according to the course of active yoga as taught in the Vedas and the Tantras, receives from me accomplishments of his desired objectives, both here and hereafter.

50. After installing my image, he should get a fine durable temple or shrine built for it; (he should get) beautiful flower-gardens laid out for it, and establish foundations (or endowments) for the regular performance of my daily worship as well as for celebration of festivals and for pilgrimage.

51. He who makes formal grants of lands, markets, villages and towns for the perpetual continuation of my worship etc. every day as well as on specially sacred or festive occasions, attains to that divine state in which he can enjoy lordly blessings similar to mine.

52. By installing my image, one attains the sovereignty of the entire globe (in future); by building a temple or a shrine, he is sure to get dominion over the three worlds; by performing worship and rendering other services, he can attain to the region of god Brahmā. But he who serves me in all the above-mentioned three ways, attains a state of (blissful) equality with me.

53. A person who follows the path of disinterested devotion to me, directly attains to me only. He who worships me in the manner described above, is blessed with the Bhakti Yoga (the path of real devotion to me).

54. He who confiscates the endowment founded either by himself or by others for the sake of the deity or Brāhmaṇas, is destined to be born as a feces-eating worm for ten crores of years.

55. Whatever fruit is destined for the actual agent of a deed, awaits also his colleague, his director or the appreciator of it, as all these are the collaborators in that act. And in the next world, everyone of them shares the reward or retribution in proportion to their contribution to that deed.

CHAPTER TWENTYEIGHT

The Essence of the Path of Knowledge

(Jñāna Yoga)

The glorious Lord said :

1.* Realizing that the universe—a product of Prakṛti (Primordial Nature) and Puruṣa (Spirit) is nothing but one substance (viz. the Brahman), a person should neither praise nor censure the serene or violent nature and action of others.

*SS and VR : (i) One should realize that the Lord (i.e. my-self) is the Inner Controller. VR adds : The universe is the body of the Supreme Soul (me). One should realise that the universe consists of the sentient (cid), non-sentient (acid) and Īvara.

(ii) VJ. interprets para as the opponent who fails to see the difference between the Brahman and jīva. (paraḥ Śatruḥ, Jīva-Brahmaṇor vailakṣaṇya-satyatāyā asahamānatvāt). The actions of such an enemy (an advaitin) are evil and should not be applauded but censured! (What a gospel of hatred in the name of the Lord !)

VJ. adds : One who perceives that the universe along with the non-sentient Prakṛti and Hiraṇyagarbha (Puruṣa) is pervaded by the Supreme Soul (Paramātmā) and is the real knower.

(iii) Ek. holds the cid-vilāsa-vāda about the universe due to the influence of Jñānaḍēva or Kāśmirī Śaivism.

2. He who applauds or condemns the natural inclinations and corresponding actions of others, immediately deviates from his own purpose (of attaining spiritual wisdom) as he, thereby, develops attachment to what is not real.

3. When the sense-organs which are the product of the Taijasa type of ego (caused by Rajas) are over-powered with sleep (and cease to function), the individual soul (jīva) remaining confined in the body, strays in the realm of illusions (Māyā) and witnesses dreams (which are unreal), and if the mind is still overcome with torpidity, loses the consciousness of the body, sinks into death-like deep sleep. Similarly, the person who perceives the outward differences only (and fails to grasp the underlying oneness—the Reality) is distracted by illusory objects of senses and is ultimately sunk in utter darkness.

4.* When the quality itself is unreal, the problem of what is auspicious (or commendable) or inauspicious (or censurable) that too to what extent, does not arise at all; for whatever is uttered by the tongue (i.e. perceived by our sense-organs) or conceived by the mind is illusory and unreal.

5. Even though the reflection of an image or the reflection of a sound, ocular illusions like a mirage are unreal (and unsubstantial), they do create an effect (on the mind of the seer or hearer). In the same way, this body or other things arouse fear till death (till every thing is dissolved into Prakṛti.)

6.** It is only the Almighty Supreme Soul who creates this universe and is both the creator and the created, the protector and protected. Being the universal Soul, he is the withdrawer and the withdrawn. (He is thus both the material and instrumental cause of the universe).

* (i) VR : The Soul is different from the body and it is wrong to identify them. The body is ever-changing (but the Soul is the same). There is no propriety in praising the body of a celestial as good or condemning the body of an insect as bad, as they are the modifications of the same Prakṛti and the body is not the Soul or Ātman.

** VJ. Being the almighty Lord, the creator etc. of the universe he creates himself into various forms, sustains them (or lives with other created beings) and withdraws them at will. The universe is thus real and not Mithyā—illusory (Satya-saṅkalpena satya-karmaṇā paramaśvaraṇa sṛṣṭavāt idam sarvaṁ satyaṁ na mithyābhūtam /

7. Hence, no being or reality other than the Supreme Soul existing independently out of the created universe, has been observed or stated (by the Vedas). The three-fold appearance of creation, sustenance and destruction of things<sup>1</sup> in the Ātman is baseless<sup>2</sup>. Therefore, do understand that this threefold universe (consisting of the seen and the process of seeing) is the product of guṇas and is caused by Māyā.

8. He who understands thoroughly this Jñāna and Vijñāna as expounded by me, does neither deprecate nor praise others but moves about in the world (far above partiality or duality) like the Sun.

9. Concluding through logical proofs like direct perception, inference, scriptural authority and self-realization that every thing (including the universe) which has a beginning has a beginning, has an end, a person should move about in the world shedding off attachment to everything.

Uddhava said :

10. (As you say it) the Samsāra (the transmigration or experience of pleasure and pain) is related neither to the Soul who is the intelligent self-luminous seer nor to the body which is the seen (or the object, an unintelligent non-self). The fact of the matter is that the transmigration does take place. (Be pleased to explain) to whom Samsāra is related.

11. The soul is not subject to decay, attributeless, pure, self-luminous like fire and is unobscured by anything (such as Nescience), while the physical body is non-sentient like wood. Now which of these two are affected by Samsāra (the cycle of births and deaths) ?

The Lord replied :

12. So long as there is a contact between the indiscernible jīva and the body, senses and vital breath, Samsāra, though it has no reality, continues to bear fruit (by giving pleasure, pain, etc.)

1. or the adhibhautika, ādhidaivika and ādhyātmika universe—ŚR.

2. The notion that Paramātmā is the Samanvayi, the Asamanvayi or the Nimitta cause is baseless. The Brahman is the material cause of the universe
—VR

13. Just as (due to brooding over objects in the wakeful condition) a person in dream experiences pleasure or pain or witnesses objects which have no real existence, this saṁsāra, though non-existent in reality, does not cease to persist in the case of a jīva who constantly thinks over objects of senses.

14.* Just as the state of dreaming brings a number of (unreal yet) evil experiences to a person who has not wakened up from sleep, but that very dream is not capable of deluding a person when wide awake.

15. (Feelings and moods like) grief, joy, fear, anger, greed, delusion, cravings and others as well as the states of birth and death, are seen related to (a jīva due to his involvement with) Ahaṁkāra ('I'-ness), but not to the Ātman.

16**. The soul who is presiding over the body, senses, vital airs and the mind, identifies himself with them and abides in them, is called jīva. His subtle body is constituted of guṇas (like Sattva etc.), and (residual impressions left after performing) Karmas or actions. He is variously sung (i.e. designated) as Sūtra or Mahat. Being controlled by Time-Spirit (or īśvara), he revolves in the cycle of life and death (Saṁsāra).

17. Having cut off the sword of spiritual knowledge sharpened by means of contemplation, this baseless, apparent multiplicity of forms like the mind, speech, vital breath and *. VR : When the spiritual knowledge enlightens a person, he ceases to identify his body with the Soul and has no attachment (tad dehātma-bhīmāna-rūpa-mahā-janana-dvārā sukha-duḥkha-kṛn na bhavati /

**EK : When the infinite Ātman, transcendental to Māyā, becomes the basis of Māyā, he is called Antarātmā. He pervades the Māyā and still remains infinite. He is hence called Paramēśvara. As he is the controller of the Māyā, he is called Īśvara, the Ruler. When the Ātman is reflected in Nescience (Avidyā), he is called jīva (individual Soul), with a powerful feeling of his identification with the body, he became Ahaṁkāra (Ego). In this way, EK describes how the Ātman transformed himself into Mind, the ten sense-organs, the subtle body and its cause, viz. the three guṇas, the objects of enjoyment, sūtra Prakṛti and its agitator, the Time-spirit. Hence the Ātman is in every object. After describing in details how every object is constituted of Ātman, EK concludes that 'Bondage' (of saṁsāra) consists in identification of the Soul with the body and the realization that the Ātman is unrelated to the body, is called Liberation (Mokṣa).

the body—all unsubstantial ( yet variously manifested unrealities ), the sage should rove all over the world, without ever being subject to desires and temptations.

18. Spiritual wisdom consists of discrimination between what is eternal ( The Brahman ) and what is non-eternal. The means to attain it are the study of the Vedas, penance (i. e. abiding by the duties prescribed for one's Varna and Āśrama), direct ( personal ) experience, tradition or spiritual guidance from the preceptor and logical inference. This wisdom convinces that the absolute entity ( viz. Brahman ) that was at the beginning of the universe, and remains after the destruction of the universe, exists in the middle also and it ( the Brahma ) manifests the universe as well as is the cause of it.

19. Just as gold bullion before it is wrought into beautiful forms exists as gold before as well as after its modifications ( as ornaments, coins or other decoratives ), and is the same gold even in the middle when it is called by different names ( as bangles, ear-rings, etc. ) similarly, I exist before the creation and after the dissolution of the universe and I am given different designations in the middle, ( while the universe exists as such. Thus the universe is not separate from me ).

20.* O Uddhava ! From the point of both invariable concomitance and logical discontinuance, the Brahma is real. It is the fourth principle beyond the mind (vijñāna) which is subject to three states (viz., wakefulness, dream-state and sleep) caused by three guṇas ( viz. Sattva, Rajas and Tamas ) which create the three-fold universe comprising the cause i. e. the sense-organs (Adhyātma) the Effect i.e. the elements (Adhibhūta) and the doer i. e. the presiding deities over the senses (Adhidaiva). He ( the Brahma ) reveals triads and persists when the above-mentioned threefold distinctness ceases to appear as when a person is merged in Samādhi (transcendental meditation).

21. That which did not exist before the creation and does not survive after it, has no existence in the middle period except merely in name.<sup>1</sup> This body which was not Ātman either before it came into existence or after its death, cannot be Ātman while the body exists. That by which anything is caused is the same as the effect that is manifested. (The effect of that which is revealed is impossible without the cause or the revealer. That is my considered opinion in the matter.

22. Though this universe of modifications appears to exist, it is non-existent. It is the modificatory creation (of Brahma) through Rajoguṇa (and as such it is a product or effect which is revealed). But the Brahman is self-existent (not a product of anything but the cause of everything else), and is self-luminous (self-revealed yet the revealer of others). Hence, it is Brahman alone which shines<sup>2</sup> manifested as the diverse wonderful universe consisting of the senses, the objects of senses (viz. subtle elements), the mind (including the deities presiding over the senses) and the gross elements.

23. Having completely dispelled (lit. cut off) all doubts regarding the nature of the Ātman<sup>3</sup> by convincing proofs (such as scriptural authority, tradition, direct experience, etc.) of correctly discriminating the Brahman and by discarding the notion that the non-Ātman (viz. the body or the universe) the Ātman, as also through the grace of the preceptor of deep spiritual knowledge, a person should stay immersed in the Supreme bliss of the Self dissociating himself from all the cravings of the senses for enjoyment.

24. The Soul is (distinct and different from and hence) not the physical body of earth. Nor is he the senses (which are instruments), their presiding deities (who are the modifications of Prakṛti), the vital breath, elements like the ether, air, water, fire and the earth; nor is he the mind, intellect, the reason and the ego, as they depend on food (for nourishment). He is also not the object of senses and Prakṛti which is the state of equilibrium of guṇas (as they are non-sentient).

Muṇḍaka 2.2.16

3. VR. This word connotes the transcendental Supreme Brahman but the term Brahma in the last foot—Brahmendriyārtha, etc. is used in the sense of Prakṛti.

25.* What benefit can accrue to my devotee who has properly realized my nature by correct discrimination, by control of his senses which are the products of three guṇas? Or what blemish is there to him if the senses get distracted? What effect can there be on the sun if clouds surrounded it or disperse from it?

26. Just as the sky is not affected by the (drying, burning, drenching and soiling powers of) wind, fire, water and the earth, nor by the (heat, cold, etc.) of the coming and passing of seasons, in the same way, Brahman which is eternal (indestructible) and transcendental to the (cosmic) ego<sup>1</sup> is never soiled by the dirt of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas which are the causes of Samsāra.

27. However, so long as Rajoguṇa which soils the mind with attachment to sense-objects is not completely wiped out, all associations with the objects (senses) created by Māyā should be scrupulously avoided by the yoga of intense and unswerving devotion to me.

28. Just as a disease which is not properly treated medically, annoys patients by its frequent virulent recurrence, the mind of an imperfect Yogi whose passions and the karmas resulting therefrom have not been completely burnt down, becomes passionately attached to every thing (objects of senses, property, relatives, etc.) and brings about the fall of a Yogi who has not attained perfection.

29. Yogins who are frustrated in the attainment of their goal by interruptions created by god, men or other beings (or by the adhibhūta, adhidaiva and adhyātma types of difficulties) (and die in an imperfect stage) again take to the path of Yoga (in the next birth) by virtue of their Yogic practice in the previous existence, but never turn to the elaborate path of Karma.

30. An ignorant person being impelled by some power (may be God's will or his previous Karma or destiny) performs * VJ. thinks that this verse applies to Hari and not to his devotees.

1. VR-: The Ātman which is expressed by the word 'I'.

some acts ( e. g. taking meals ) till his death and undergoes modifications (such as experience of pleasure or pain) . A spiritually wise person though living in the domain of Prakṛti or Māyā is thus subject to it, but he is free from the cravings of his senses as he has experience of the spiritual bliss of the Soul.

31. (Here is the description of 'asamprajñāta samādhi'). He whose mind is concentrated on and established in the Self-Ātman is unaware of his body irrespective of whether it is standing, sitting, walking, strolling, lying down, passing urine, eating food or doing any other natural activity.

32. Even if a man of spiritual wisdom happens to perceive the unreal objects of extroverted senses (like those experienced by touch, taste, smell, etc.), due to their many-ness, he reasons that they are other than the self and he, therefore, does not regard them as real like a person who has risen from sleep regards the objects of his vanishing dream.

33. Dear Uddhava ! Before the dawn of spiritual knowledge, this body marvellously wrought by (three guṇas) and karmas was regarded as not distinct from the self (due to absence of discriminating power). But this (misconception of the identity of the soul and the body during the state of bondage) is dispelled by spiritual knowledge; for the soul is neither taken (perceived) nor forsaken !

34. Just as the sun-rise would disperse from the eyes of men darkness (that obscured their vision) but does not create a new thing (like a pitcher, etc.) which was not there, similarly a thorough discriminative realization of the self dispels the darkness of ignorance blinding the intelligence of man.

35. This ( ever-present eternal) Soul is self-luminous (absolutely unsoiled by ignorance), unborn, immeasurable (beyond the ken of logical reasoning), unlimited by time and space (hence not subject to modifications of growth, decay, etc.<sup>1</sup>) self-luminous (capable of cognising every thing), one without a second, beyond the range of words. It is when impelled by it that the speech and life-breath function.<sup>1</sup>

36. But it is self-delusion to entertain the notion of difference in the Soul who is absolute. For even this delusion about difference<sup>2</sup> (has to depend on the Soul) as it has no other support than the Soul<sup>3</sup>.

37. It is the view of some persons who regard themselves as learned that duality in what is perceptible by names and forms (i. e. this body and the external world) and in what is constituted of five elements, is irrefutable and the statements in (texts of) Vedānta are merely complimentary (artha-vāda). But this conviction (of the so-called learned people) is meaningless<sup>4</sup>.

38. If a yogin who has not yet attained perfection in Yoga (lit. is yet unripe in yogic practices) but is still striving in yoga, be visited by (some such difficulties (as bodily indisposition, etc.) the following procedure is prescribed (as a remedy).

39. He should cure some of these (viz. troubles from heat and cold) by yogic concentration (on the moon and the sun), some (caused by flatulence and other abdominal troubles) by various (yogic) physical postures, and some others (caused by evil planets, serpents, etc.) by penance, mantras (sacred formula) and medicinal herbs.

40. He should overcome some obstacles (caused by lust and anger) by intensively meditating on me. by singing my name and glorifying me while others (caused by hypocrisy and arrogance) leading to evil consequences by attending upon persons who are past-masters in yoga.

41. Some persons try to keep their body in sound health and preserve their youth by various expedients and then they begin the yogic practice for attaining miraculous powers.

—VR.

3. neha nāndasti kiñcana—

Kaṭha 4.11
Bṛhad. 4.4.19.

4. VR. regards the above views of the self-conceited as delusion of the mind.

42. But this cause should not be approved (and adopted) by the wise, as, after all, the physical body is perishable like fruits of a tree (and these efforts are in vain).

43. Even if the body of a person who takes yogic exercises every day becomes exceptionally strong (and lasting to the end of a Kalpa), he should not give much importance to it believing it to be imperishable. He should discontinue that yoga of physical culture and devote himself to me.

44. If a yogi entirely entrusts himself to me and devotes himself scrupulously to the practice of yoga (as detailed by me), he may not be hindered by obstacles. Becoming totally free from all desires and yearnings, he should enjoy himself thoroughly immersed in the bliss of self-realization.

CHAPTER TWENTYNINE

Bhakti Yoga Recapitulated :

Departure of Uddhava to Badarikāśrama

Uddhava submitted :

1. O Imperishable Lord ! It is my considered opinion that the course of yoga as enunciated by you is impracticable to those who have no control over their minds. Pray, be pleased to elucidate to me (in easily understandable terms) that spiritual path by following which an ordinary person will attain perfection without any difficulty.

2. Aspirants after yoga who endeavour to concentrate their minds are subjected to great strains in controlling their mind, and feeling fatigued and frustrated in attaining mental serenity, they become despondent, O lotus-eyed God.

3. Hence, O Lotus-eyed Lord of the universe, swans i.e. those who can discriminate between what is essential and unessential (i.e. your devotees) joyfully resort to your lotus-feet which yield nectarlike spiritual bliss but these arrogant followers of the karma and yoga path devoid of your Bhakti—do not resort to them as they are confounded by your Māyā.

4. What wonder is there, O Imperishable Lord, that you abide by the will of your servants who have dedicated themselves exclusively to you? Even though your foot-stool gets polished with the crests of the glorious crowns of great rulers like god Brahmā and other rulers of the world (while they prostrated themselves at your feet), you took delight in the friendship of beasts (monkeys like Sugriva, Hanumān), O friend of all living beings.

5. What person who is grateful and conscious of the gracious blessings bestowed by you upon your dependants (devotees who resort to you) can forsake you, the Inner Controller, beloved-most and Ruler of all beings? What person will accept something other than you which, though leading to good fortune, make us forget about you? (or who would worship some other god for securing great fortune or celestial world?) What object is inaccessible to us who devote ourselves to the dust of your feet?

6. O Ruler of the universe! Wise persons who gratefully remember your gracious favours and are full of spiritual bliss, realize that they cannot repay your obligations even during the longest span of life like that of god Brahmā; for you are present externally as the spiritual guide and internally as the Antar-yāmin (the Inner Controller) and thus you dispel all inauspiciousness (sins, evil desires) of all creatures and manifest your true nature to them.

Śrī Śuka said :

7. When respectfully inquired thus by Uddhava who was deeply affectionate to him at heart, Lord Kṛṣṇa whose sport is the evolution of the universe, and who, by his potencies viz. Sattva, Rajas and Tamas, has assumed three forms (viz. that of Viṣṇu, Brahmā and Śiva respectively) and is the Supreme Lord of the rulers of the universe, with a winsome smile replied affectionately to him.

The Lord said :

8. It is with pleasure that I shall explain to you the course of righteous duties which are exceedingly auspicious and pleasing to me. By following them with devotion, a mortal being can over-come the unconquerable death (Samsāra).

9. Remembering me diligently, one should perform all his duties dedicating them to me. He should resign and concentrate his heart and mind to me and should find delight in doing duties pertaining to me.

10. He should resort to the holy lands (and sacred places) frequented by my saintly devotees, and he should follow the course of conduct of my devotees whether they be gods, Asuras or human beings.

11. Either individually or in a group he should arrange to celebrate, on holy days (like Ekādāśī) pilgrimages, processions or great festivities accompanied with songs, dances and other royal arrangements worthy of great kings.

12. He should consider that he visualizes me only, manifested in all beings, both internally and externally, like the sky. With a pure, sinless heart he should see me within himself also.

13-14. In this way, O greatly enlightened Uddhava, he should establish himself in pure knowledge and should consider all created beings as being the God himself and respect them all. He who looks with an equal eye (without making any difference in) Brāhmaṇas and low caste peoples, a robber and one devoted to Brāhmaṇas, the sun and the spark of fire, a cruel and merciful person, (such impartial person) is really the spiritually wise person.

15. A person who invariably considers me to be present in all human beings, finds that before he is free from the (feeling of) inimical competition (with the equals), jealousy (against superiors) and contempt (towards the inferiors) along with his egotism.

16. Disregarding one's friends and relatives who smile at him in ridicule and setting aside the viewpoint (about the superiority) of one's person and giving up the sense of shame, should prostrate himself like a staff in bowing to all beings upto a dog, a Cāṇḍāla (a man of the lowest caste) a cow and a donkey.<sup>1</sup>

17. He should continue to propitiate me orally, mentally and physically in this manner, so long as the perception of my presence in all beings is not engendered in him.

18. To him everything appears as permeated with Brahman by virtue of his knowledge that God is everywhere. Realizing this clearly and with all his doubts clarified, he should cease to participate in Karmas (or follow the path of Karma).

19. It is my considered opinion that out of all the pathways to God, to perceive my presence in all beings in one's thought, word and deeds is the most efficacious one.

20. Dear Uddhava ! Even if merely a beginning is made, there is no danger of the slightest loss (of the exertions made) in the righteous course of conduct prescribed by me, as it is free from wishful expectation, and it has been so systematically ordained by me as it would not be affected by guṇas. (It is not the ordinary Dharma laid down by Smṛti-writers like Manu).

21.* Whatever fruitless exertion of a worldly nature such as fleeing out of fear, lamenting out of grief, etc., if dedicated to me who am of transcendental nature, attains the status of Dharma (as in the case of Kariṣa's fear, Gopī's love, Śiśupāla's hatred).

22. That one should attain to the Real through the unreal (body) and reach me, the immortal eternal Lord, by means of this mortal coil—This is the most intelligent act of an intellectual and the highest sagacity of the wise.

23. What has been expounded to you uptill now by me either in details or in brief, constitutes the complete epitome of the definitive teaching on Para Brahman. This is difficult to grasp even for gods (though they are sāttvic by nature).

1. Strangely enough VJ. distinguishes between Brāhmaṇas and others in the list and lays down that one should physically lay prostrate before Brāhmaṇas but in the case of Cāṇḍālas and others he should bow mentally only. (Brāhmaṇāṇaṁ prati bhūman daṣḍaṇaṁ naman anyāṁcāṇḍālāṇaṁ prati manasāsmaraṇam iti bhedaḥ /)

* VJ. Acts of devotion, worship, contemplation on other deities is a fruitless exertion (tadāyāsas tatra kṛiyamāṇa-prayatno nirarthaḥ syāt /).

24. This spiritual knowledge has been repeatedly imparted to you with clear logical reasoning. A person who digests this will get all his doubts resolved and will be liberated from Saṁsāra.

25. He who will treasure up in his memory my lucid, well-reasoned exposition of your queries, will attain to the eternal Supreme Brahman which is the secret (knowledge) of the Vedas.

26. I, of my own accord, will reveal myself to the expositor of the Brahman who would clearly explain this knowledge to my devotees.

27. He who would loudly read out this sanctifying, supremely holy text (containing my teaching), will every day make others see me by the light of spiritual wisdom, and will himself get purified (by realizing me in his mind purified by Yoga<sup>1</sup>).

28. He who devoutly and with concentrated mind listens to this every day and develops supreme devotion unto me, is never bound by Karmas.

29. O friend, have you fully realized the true nature of Brahman? Has your infatuation and the grief that tormented your heart disappeared, dear friend?

30. This knowledge should not be imparted to a hypocrite, a nonbeliever, a cheat, an unwilling listener, a person who is not devoted to me or an ill-mannered fellow.

31. You should expound this to persons who are free from the above-mentioned defects, are friendly to Brāhmaṇas and (reciprocally) liked by them. You should teach this to those who are pious, holy and to Sūdras and women if they are devoted.

32. Once this spiritual wisdom is properly imbibed, nothing remains to be known by the aspirant of (spiritual) knowledge, just as nothing remains worth drinking when once the exquisitely sweet nectar is sipped.

33. (There may be many things worth knowing and means of achieving object in the case of non-devotees, but I am

1. yoga-parituddhena manasā śakṣāt-kurvanniti bhāvaḥ—VR everything to my devotee. Hence you seek resort in me alone.)

Whatever objectives or purposes are accomplished by means of (spiritual) knowledge, performance of righteous duties, yogic practices, pursuit of commerce and agriculture, and wielding ruling power—that is all the main four objectives in life (or Puruṣārthas), I myself am to you<sup>1</sup>.

34. When a mortal being has renounced all courses of actions (prescribed in Śāstras) and has dedicated his self to me, I select him as the recipient of my Special Grace. He then, attains immortality and certainly becomes eligible to be one with me sharing my divine powers of omnipresence, omnipotence, etc.

Śrī Śuka said :

35. Having heard the speech of the Lord of hallowing renown, Uddhava, to whom the path of Yoga (union with the Almighty Lord) was thus lucidly explained, folded his palms (in reverence) and with his eyes overflowing with tears of joy and throat choked with overwhelming affection, he was unable to express himself.

36. With courageous efforts, he controlled and stabilised his mind which was agitated with overwhelming affection. Feeling (with gratitude) how blessed he was (by the Lord), he folded his palms (to pay obeisance) and touching His lotus-feet with his head, he submitted to the most prominent hero among Yadus, as follows:

37. “The pitchy darkness of delusion clasped by me so far, has been dispelled by your mere enlightening presence (what need be said about your illuminating discourses?) O creator of god Brahmā, can cold, darkness or fear (of any of these) overpower a person who is sitting adjacent to the fire (or the sun).

38. (Your compassion is limitless). Compassionate as you are, the brilliant lamp of spiritual wisdom has been given to me again. What grateful person would like to abandon the soles of your feet and resort to others for shelter.

39. The strong bonds of (the net of) my affection for (my clansmen like) Dāśārhas, Vṛṣṇis, Andhakas and Sāttvatas which were extended by you through (the agency of) your Māyā, for the expansion (procreation) of our race, have been cut asunder by you with the weapon of self-realization.

40. Obeisance to you, great yogin. I have approached you for protection. Be pleased to so guide me as I should find incessant joy from and affection for your lotus-feet."

The Lord Commanded:

41-42. Dear Uddhava ! In compliance of my command, do you go to my hermitage called Badarī. Absolve yourself of all impurities there, by performing ablutions and sipping the holy waters of the sacred Gaṅgā which became sanctified by contact with my feet. Having shaken off all your sins and impurities by the very sight of the Alakanandā<sup>1</sup> put on bark garments and subsisting on forest-products (like fruits, roots), stay on unaffected by any longing for pleasures and comforts, my dear.

43-44. Forbearing all experiences of opposite states (like heat and cold, pleasure and pain) continue to be straightforward and good in your behaviour. With your senses under control, serene and with your intellect (mind) concentrated on your Ātman, remain endowed with spiritual knowledge and self-realization. Pondering deeply and constantly and realizing whatever you have so assiduously learnt from me, you dedicate your mind and speech to me and continue to constantly abide by the duties prescribed by me. (If you do so) you will transcend the three courses (of existence caused by three guṇas--Sattva, Rajas and Tamas, viz. birth in the heaven and on the earth as a human being or a sub-human being or the three states of wakefulness, dreaming and deep sleep) and shall attain to me (who am beyond Māyā).

Śrī Śuka narrated:

45. Thus commanded by Lord Kṛṣṇa (devotion to whom terminates Samsāra), Uddhava circumambulated him by the right and placed his head on his feet. And even though he transcended the pairs of opposites like joy and sorrow, his heart melted (at the juncture of departure) and he moistened his feet with tears.

46. Nervous and afraid at the imminent separation from the Lord whose affection was extremely difficult to give up, and too much grieved to be able to leave him, Uddhava was deeply agonised. Bearing on his head the wooden sandals (given out of grace as a parting gift) of Lord Kṛṣṇa, Uddhava bowed to him again and again and proceeded<sup>1</sup> to Badarikāśrama.

47. Firmly installing him on the throne of his inmost heart, the great devotee of the Lord reached Viśālā (i.e. Badarikāśrama). Scrupulously following the course of (devotional) duties taught by Kṛṣṇa, the one Friend of the world, Uddhava ultimately attained to his state.

47A. (The 2nd line in VJ'S Text)

Having practised penance as instructed by the (only real) Friend of the universe, he attained to Vaikuṇṭha, the region of Hari.

48. Whosoever tastes with deep reverence ever so little of this nectar of spiritual knowledge overfull with the ocean of spiritual bliss, taught to his devotee Uddhava by Lord Kṛṣṇa, whose feet are resorted to and served by the masters of Yoga—he gets Final Emancipation from Samsāra along with the world (the people) who associated themselves with him.

49. I bow to the Supreme Person, designated as Kṛṣṇa, the First cause of the universe, the Author of the Vedas, who

1. In order to reconcile this with Skandha III where Maitreya and Uddhava were given spiritual guidance by Kṛṣṇa, ŚR states that while on his way to Badarī, Uddhava heard of Kṛṣṇa's going to Prabhāsa. He hastily returned and found him sitting alone. Maitreya also came there. Kṛṣṇa gave them spiritual guidance. But Skandha XI is silent about Uddhava's return.

in order to terminate the Samsāra (transmigration of the Soul) of his devotees following the path of renunciation (nivṛtti), and to dispel the fear of old age, death, etc. of his servants following the path of Pravṛtti, extracted like bee the (honey-like) essence of the Vedas in the form of spiritual knowledge and self-realization and gave it to his devotees (following Nivṛtti Mārga) and offered the immortalizing nectar churned out of the sea to his servants (such as gods for drinking).

CHAPTER THIRTY

*Extermination of the Race of Yādavas**

The King (Parikṣit) enquired:

1. When Uddhava, a great votary of the Lord, repaired to the forest (at Badarikāśrama), what did the glorious Lord, the creator of all beings, do at Dvārakā?

2-3. When his own race was threatened with annihilation by the curse of Brāhmaṇas, how did the Lord of Yādavas cast off his body which was beloved-most to the eyes of all. His personality, so charming that women, having but once looked at it, could not take away their eyes from it; which having once entered into the ears of the saintly persons gets (as if) inscribed in their heart and never leaves it (i.e. is never forgotten by them): Whose glorious splendour when extolled by poets, brings special charms to their words and enhances respect for them; having seen that form occupying the (charioteer's) seat in Arjuna's chariot, the warriors who were slain in the (battle at Kurukṣetra) in his presence, attained a form similar to him.

* This is merely a summary of the internecine feud among Yādavas. A blow-by-blow account of the fight is given in the Mausala Parva of the MBH. It appears more reliable as there we find the dead bodies of Balarāma and Kṛṣṇa traced and duly cremated (MBH, Mausala 7.31), Kṛṣṇa did not go physically to the next world as the Bh. P. wants us to believe in this chapter.

The sage Śrī Śuka replied:

4. Noticing terrible portents appearing in the sky, on the earth and in the mid-air, Kṛṣṇa addressed the Yādavas who were seated in the assembly hall called 'Sudharmā', as follows:

5. "O foremost of Yādavas ! These terrible portents of a serious nature like unto the flags of the god of Death (Yama) are appearing in Dvārakā. We should not tarry here even for a short while.

6. Let women, children and old people go from this place to Śaṅkhoddhāra<sup>1</sup>. We shall go to the holy place Prabhāsa<sup>2</sup> where the Sarasvatī<sup>3</sup> flows to the west.

7. We shall take our bath there, observe a fast and serenely meditate. We shall also worship our deities with ablutions and application of sandal-paste and offering other articles of worship.

8. Having received the benediction (of Brāhmaṇas) by the recitation of sacred Mantras and performance of expiatory rites, we shall worship them with gifts of cows, land, gold, cloths, elephants, horses, chariots and houses.

9. For this is the surest procedure to avert evil and the best means of ensuring auspiciousness. Worship of gods, Brāhmaṇas and cows definitely brings prosperity to beings both here and hereafter."

10. All the (council of) elder Yadus attentively listened to this advice of Kṛṣṇa, the slayer of demon Madhu. They agreed with his proposal, ferried across the sea in boats and drove to Prabhāsa in their chariots.

11. At Prabhāsa, as per instructions of the Lord, whom they regarded as their deity, the Yādavas performed with great faith and devotion, all the rites conducive to their prosperity.

1. The island of Bati (Beyt) at the north-western extremity of the gulf of Cutch. Viṣṇu is said to have killed Śaṅkhāsura and recovered the Vedas from him here. GDAMI, P. 177.

2. Somanath or Devapaṭṭana near Verawal in Saurashtra.

3. Now called Raunākṣī. On the bank of this river under an aspen tree, Kṛṣṇa passed away—GDAMI, P. 181.

12. At that very sacred place, as Fate would have it, Yādavas lost their judgement and drank the highly intoxicating sweet beverage, a liquor called Maireyaka<sup>1</sup> by the filtrates of which the reasoning faculty is completely lost.

13. There broke out a bitter conflict between the proud and haughty warriors who were dead drunk with a strong liquor and were deluded by the Māyā of Kṛṣṇa.

14. Infuriated with rage<sup>2</sup>, those desperadoes fought each other with bows, swords, spears, maces, iron clubs, and lances on the sea-shore.

15. Confronting each other in their chariots, elephants etc. decked with banners flowing in the air, and riding on donkeys, camels, bulls, buffaloes, mules and human beings (slaves), the highly intoxicated Yādava warriors struck one another with arrows even as wild elephants dash against each other with their tusks.

16. With increasing intense hostility while fighting, there were duels between Pradyumna and Sāmba, Akrūra and Bhoja, Aniruddha and Sātyaki, Subhadra and Saṅgrāmajit, terrible (uncle and cousin) of the (same) name Gada (one being the brother and the other a son of Kṛṣṇa), Sumitra and Suratha as combatants.

17. While others like Niśatha, Ulmuka and others the chief of whom were Sahasrajit, Śatajit and Bhānu became blind with intoxication and deluded by (the Māyā of) Lord Kṛṣṇa, challenged each other and meeting at close quarters struck each other mercilessly.

18. Forgetting their mutual friendly relations, all the clans of Yādavas such as Dāsārhas, Vṛṣṇa, Andhakas, Bhojas,

1. SKD III., P. 786 gives the following ingredients of this wine:

*Sīdhur ikṣurasaiḥ pakvair apakvair āsavo bhavet /
maireyam dhātakī-puṣpam guḍa-dhānānnasamhitam //*

I could not trace this verse in Mādhava-nidāna if by 'Mādhava' that work is indicated in SKD. From its name it (the liquor) appears to be a stimulant.

2. The MBH describes how Yuyudhāna's criticism of Kṛtavarmā's dastardly attack on the sleeping Pāṇḍava army, sparked off the struggle. The whole report (MBH Mausala 3.1766) reads like an account by an eye-witness.

Sātvatas, Madhus, Arbudas, Māthura and Śūrasenas, the Visarjanas, the Kukuras and the Kuntis (out of them some were domiciled in countries like Arbuda, Mathura, and Śūrasena) fought with one another.

19. Sons fought with fathers, brothers with brothers, maternal uncles with their sister's sons, nephews with uncles, friends with friends, well-wishers with well-wishers and clansmen with clansmen, as all of them were stupefied and deluded (by Hari's Māyā).

20. (After a time) when the (stocks of) arrows was being exhausted and bows (which they used like sticks) got broken and their weaponry was finished, they (pulled out and) clenched into fists the Erakā grass (that grew abundantly on the shore) as weapons.

21. And lo ! The Erakā grass when held by them in their fists, became adamant like hard iron-bars with which they struck their adversaries. When forbidden by Kṛṣṇa, they (turned against him and) attacked him.

22. O king ! Being infatuated they looked upon (kṛṣṇa) and Balarāma as their enemies. Those desperadoes determined to kill them and attacked them, O king.

23. At this, they (Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma) on their part became enraged, O Parīkṣit (scion of the Kuru race). They uprooted a handful of Erakā grass which (automatically was transformed into iron bars wherewith they struck back and moved about in the battle, killing (Yādavas with their iron clubs).

24. The wrath intensified with jealousy of Yādavas who were bedevilled by Brahmanical curse and whose minds were completely perverted by Kṛṣṇa's deluding potency which wrought their complete annihilation even as fire sparked off by friction of bamboos, reduces the whole forest to ashes.

25. When all clansmen belonging to his race were thus done to death, Lord Kṛṣṇa felt that all the remnant of the burden of the earth had been lightened.

26. Repairing to the sea-shore, Balarāma entered into Yogic meditation on the Supreme person and uniting his soul with the Supreme Soul, left this mortal world.<sup>1</sup>

1. - The MBH. differs in details (vide MBH Mausala. 4).

27-28. Noticing the passing away of Balarāma, the glorious Lord Kṛṣṇa, son of Devakī, quietly went to a Pippala tree and sat down on the ground (with his back resting against its Trunk) manifesting his (original) radiant four-armed personality dispelling the darkness of all the quarters with his brilliant lustre like a smokeless fire.

29. (His form) was bearing the Śrivatsa mark, blue like a rainy cloud, brilliant like burnished gold, wearing a pair of silken garments and the most auspicious (in appearance).

30. His lotus-like countenance was graced with charming smile and was adorned with bluish locks of hair and eyes beautiful like lotus; it was beautified with dazzling alligator-shaped ear-rings.

31. It was adorned with a (brilliant) zone, sacred thread, a crown, bracelets, armlets, a necklace of pearls, (a pair of) anklets, rings and the Kaustubha jewel.

32. His person was encircled by a Vanamālā (a garland of special sylvan flowers). It was attended by his weapons in

(1) When Kṛṣṇa saw his sons killed, he used all his divine weapons and finished with the Yādavas.

(2) Babhru and his charioteer stopped him telling him "most of Yādavas are killed, let us find out where Balarāma is". (MBH Mausala 2.43-47).

(3) Bala-Rāma was found resting under a tree. Kṛṣṇa deputed Dārūka to Arjuna to take away women and children from Dvārakā.

(4) When Babhru whom he deputed to protect women and property at Dvārakā was killed in Kṛṣṇa's presence by a hunter's arrow.

(5) Kṛṣṇa told Balarāma to wait till he returned from Dvārakā making arrangements for the protection of women and children.

(6) Kṛṣṇa went to Dvārakā and requested his father Vasudeva to protect women (and children) till the arrival of Arjuna at Dvārakā.

(7) He reported what happened at Prabhāsa and informed him of his decision to spend the rest of his life (along with Balarāma) in performing penance.

(8) On his return, he found Balarāma giving up his life by a Yogic process.

(9) Wandering in a pensive mood, he decided to give up his body and he lay in Yogic Samādhi when he was pierced with a hunter's arrow.

Was it the second attempt on Kṛṣṇa's life when the first-mis-aimed arrow killed Babhru instead of Kṛṣṇa?

33. A hunter called 'Jarā' who fixed on the point of his arrow the un-pulverized remnant of the iron pestle ("born" from Sāmba<sup>1</sup>) pierced therewith his foot which appeared in shape like the mouth of a deer (wrongly presuming him to be a deer).

34. Seeing that it was a four-armed person (whom he hit), the horrified perpetrator of the (homicidal) sin prostrated himself at the feet of Kṛṣṇa, the enemy of Asuras, touching his feet with his head.

35. 'It is sheerly out of ignorance that this has been committed by me, O Madhusūdana. It behoves you, O faultless Lord of hallowing glory, to pardon me for this sin.

36. This sinful act against you has been committed by me, O Lord Viṣṇu, whose constant remembrance, the wise say is efficacious enough to destroy the ignorance of men.

37. Therefore, put an end to my life immediately, O Vaikunṭha (Viṣṇu) so that I should not commit such an offence against any other righteous person.

38. (If you agree that my shooting an arrow at you is not my fault but the effect of the Brahmanical curse, I submit) even god Brahmā, his sons, god-like Rudra and others, and the Vedic seers (the masters of the divine words) have failed to grasp the working of your Yoga Māyā. How can we of impious birth whose vision has been blind-folded by your Māyā can say anything about this sportive act (līlā) of yours? (Be gracious enough to kill me and absolve me of my sins).'

The Lord replied :

39. 'Be not afraid, O Jarā, Get up. What you have done is exactly what was willed by me. (Cast off your body and) with my permission, do you go to heaven, the region of the righteous people.'

40. Thus commanded by the glorious Lord Kṛṣṇa who takes any form at his will<sup>2</sup>, the hunter circumambulated (by the right) Lord Kṛṣṇa, bowed to him and went to heaven in a celestial car.

41. Dārūka was tracing Kṛṣṇa by his foot-prints, came in search of him. He identified the spot by the scent of the Tulasī borne on the wind and he stood before him.

42. He saw his Lord there seated at the foot of the Aśvattha tree, attended upon by his sharp brilliant weapons in person. With his eyes bedimmed with tears and heart overflowing with loyalty and affection, he jumped down from (the charioteer's seat in) the chariot and immediately fell at his feet.

43. (Dārūka said :) O Lord, just as one feels lost in darkness, at night, after the setting of the moon, ever since I did not see your lotus-feet, my vision was enveloped in darkness, and was completely lost. I do not see directions (how to behave as well). I have lost the peace of my mind."

44. Even as the charioteer (Dārūka) was speaking thus, his chariot with its flag bearing the ensign of Garuḍa, soared up into heaven along with horses, while Dārūka merely looked on (agape).

45. Even the celestial weapons of Viṣṇu followed the chariot. Lord Kṛṣṇa then addressed his charioteer who was dazed at heart with utter astonishment (at the happening).

46. You go to Dvārakā, O charioteer, and report to the Yādava kinsmen thereof the internecine conflict and mutual slaughter of our clansmen, Balarāma's passing away and my present condition.

47. Warn them that the sea will submerge the city of Yādavas (Dvārakā) abandoned by me. Hence you (i.e. both Dārūka and the remaining inhabitants of Dvārakā) alongwith their kinsmen should not stay at Dvārakā.

48. Taking with you the members of your families as well as our parents, all of you go to Indraprastha, under the escort of Arjuna, on the way.

49. Establishing yourself firmly in spiritual wisdom and remaining indifferent (to weal and woe) you follow the spiritual path proclaimed by me. Realizing that all this universe or Samsāra is nothing but the creation of Māyā (and hence unreal) you should attain spiritual peace of mind.

50. Thus commanded Dāruka went round Lord Kṛṣṇa (by the right-hand side) and bowing him down again and again and placing his feet on his head (i.e. touching them with his head), he went to the city (of Dvārakā) with a heavy heart.

CHAPTER THIRTYONE

Lord Kṛṣṇa's Return to Vaikuṇṭha

Śrī Śuka said:

1-2. (After the departure of Dāruka) there arrived god Brahmā, god Śiva along with his consort Pārvatī, gods led by the great Indra, Sages along with the progenitors of the world, manes, Siddhas, Gandharvas (Celestial singers), Vidyādharas, great serpents, Cāraṇas, Yakṣas and Rākṣasas, Kinnaras, Apsaras (celestial nymphs), Brāhmaṇas like Maitreya and others (or birds inhabiting the region of Garuḍa).

3-4. All of them were desirous and extremely eager to witness the glorious ascent of the Lord to his region. Glorifying in their songs the exploits and incarnation of Lord Kṛṣṇa the descendant of Sūta, they crowded the sky with rows or their aerial cars and rained on him showers of flowers with the deepest devotion, O King.

5. Beholding god Brahmā (the grand-sire of the universe) and other celestials who were his own glorious manifestations, that all-pervading Lord concentrated his mind on the Supreme Self and closed his lotus eyes in samādhi (meditation) with a view to avoid the expected requests of the gods to visit their respective regions.

6. By the technical Yogic process called Āgneyi whereby the Yogi concentrates his mind on fire and burns down his body, the Lord did not consume with fire his world-enchancing form which was very auspicious for concentration and meditation (and was the support of the world) but entered with his body his own realm<sup>1</sup>

1. Contrast MBH Mausala 7.31.
tataḥ Śarīre Rāmasya Vāsudevasya co'bhayoḥ /
**anviṣya dāhayāmāsa puruṣaṁ āptakāribhiḥ //*

7. Kettle drums were sounded in the heavens; flowers were showered down from the sky. And Truth, Righteousness, Fortitude, Glory, and Prosperity quitted the earth and followed him (to Vaikuṇṭha).

8. Gods and others (who assembled there), of whom god Brahmā was prominent, were not able to behold (or even cognise) Lord Kṛṣṇa of inscrutable ways, while he was entering his own realm (Vaikuṇṭha) and they were left dazed in utter astonishment.

9. The passing away of Lord Kṛṣṇa could not be perceived by gods, just as the trail of lightening in the sky after its passing across the mass of clouds cannot be seen by (mortal) human beings.

10. Witnessing the (incomprehensible) Yogic way of Hari's disappearance, gods headed by Brahmā, Rudra and others were wonderstruck and glorifying it, they returned to their respective regions.

11. O King, please note that the incarnation, disappearance and the (sportive) activities among human beings (Yādavas) of the transcendental Lord, are nothing but histrionics staged by dint of his Māyā Potency, like those of a theatrical performer. Having created this universe by his great Will Power (without any outside material or agency), and having entered it as Antaryāmin (Inner Controller) and sported (into it), he withdraws it within himself in the end, and abides established in his own (glorious) state.

12. Was that Lord incapable of protecting his own person who with (i.e. while he was in) his mortal body brought back to his teacher Sāṇḍipani, his son who had been snatched away to the region of Death (Yama), who restored you to life while you were (practically) burnt by a great missile (Brahmāstra discharged by Aśvatthāman) and who vanquished Rudra, the destroyer of Yama and transported (his assassin) the hunter bodily to the celestial world?

13. Though he alone was the sole cause of the subsistence, evolution and destruction of the entire universe as he was the wholesale controller of all powers, he did not wish to leave his person behind in this mortal world, as there was no propriety in retaining a mortal body in this world and wanted to demonstrate the glorious state of those who are established in the Self. ( Had he left his body in this world, the Yogins would have preferred to stay on in this world.

14. He who gets up early in the morning and devoutly glorifies the passage to the Supreme State by Lord Kṛṣṇa, will reach that highest stage to which none is superior.

15. Dāruka ( the charioteer of Kṛṣṇa ), bereaved of Kṛṣṇa arrived at Dvārakā. He fell at the feet of Vasudeva and Ugrasena and bathed them with tears profusely.

16. He reported to them, O King, of the total destruction of the Yādava clans. Hearing that heart-rending tale, people (of Dvārakā) were over-whelmed with grief and fainted.

17. Deeply agitated at their bereavement from Kṛṣṇa and beating their faces and heads (with uncontrollable grief), they hastily rushed to the spot where their kinsmen lay lifeless.

18. When Devakī, Rohiṇī as well as Vasudeva were unable to see their sons Balarāma and Kṛṣṇa, they were so afflicted with grief that they lost their consciousness.

19. They were so intensely stricken with grief at their separation from Lord Kṛṣṇa that they gave up their life then and there<sup>1</sup>. The Yādava woman embraced their husbands and ascended the funeral pyres (burnt themselves in the fire).

20. The wives of Balarāma as well clasped his body and entered fire. Queens of Vasudeva embraced his body and the daughters-in-law of Kṛṣṇa clasped each the bodies of their respective husbands like Pradyumna and others, and consorts of Kṛṣṇa like Rukmiṇī and others with their hearts fixed on him entered the fire.<sup>2</sup>

1. The MBH differs. After Arjuna's arrival at Dvārakā, he held consultations with Vasudeva about taking away Yādava men and women with their kit. Vasudeva cast off his ghost by the Yogic process, and his four chief queens immolated themselves in the funeral pyre of Vasudeva—Mausala 7.15-25.

2. MBH. states that only Rukmiṇī, Gāndhārī, Śaibyā, Haimavati and Jāmbavati immolated themselves in fire, while Satyabhāmā and other dear wives of Kṛṣṇa went to the forest for performing penance.

—Mausala 773-74.

21. Deeply afflicted with the grief of separation from his dearest friend Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna consoled himself by pondering over the words of spiritual wisdom addressed to him (in the Bhagavad Gītā and the Anu Gītā) by Kṛṣṇa.

22. In the order of seniority of his relatives who were killed in the fight and had their races cut off, Arjuna arranged for the proper performance of the obsequies (for their welfare in the next world.)

23. The sea immediately inundated the city of Dvārakā forsaken by Hari, with the exception of the palace of the Lord, O great king.

24. It is the auspicious-most of the auspicious and by its very remembrance it removes all evils (including sins), for the glorious Lord Kṛṣṇa, the slayer of demon Madhu, always abides there.

25. Arjuna escorted women, children and old men, the survivors of the massacre and rehabilitated them at Indra-Prastha (the previous capital of Pāṇḍavas) and coronated Vajra (the son of Aniruddha, scion of the royal Yādava family) there, as their king.

26. Having heard the report of the destruction of their (Yādava) friends from Arjuna, your grandfathers installed you (on the throne of Hastināpura) as the successor of their dynasty, and all of them proceeded to the Great path (to the other world).

27. The moral (person) who with devout faith would glorify the incarnations and sportive acts of Lord Viṣṇu (Kṛṣṇa), the God of gods becomes absolved of all sins.

28. He who sings the above-mentioned auspicious-most sportive acts of the glorious Lord Hari in his boyhood, and his delightful incarnation and great feats achieved therein-which he has heard here (in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa or elsewhere, would have engendered in him, supreme devotion and would attain to the goal reached only by Parama Haṁsas (i. e. recluses of the highest order).

SKANDHA TWELFTH

CHAPTER ONE

Dynasties Of The Kali Age

King Parikṣit requested:

1. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the ornament of the race of Yadus, retired to His glorious abode (in Vaikuṇṭha), whose dynasty continued to rule over the earth? Be pleased to narrate that to me, O sage.

Śrī Śuka said:

2-3. O king, Purañjaya<sup>1</sup>, who has been named as the last prince in Br̥hadratha's dynasty, is yet to be born. His minister Śunaka will, however, assassinate his master Purañjaya and will instal his son Pradyota<sup>2</sup>, as the king on his throne. His son will be pālaka whose successor will be Viśākhayūpa from whom will be born Rājaka.

4. Rājaka's son will be Nandivardhana. These five Pradyotas will enjoy the (sovereignty of the) earth for one hundred and thirty eight years.<sup>3</sup>

5. Then there will be born Śiśunāga whose son will be Kākavarṇa. His son will be Kṣemadharmā. He will beget a son called Kṣetrajña.

1. Bh. P. IX.22.49 refers to him as Ripuñjaya.

2. Historically Pradyotas did not rule Magadha. Buddhist records and Purāṇic accounts make Caṇḍa Pradyota, a contemporary of Bimbisāra, as the founder of a dynasty in Avanti and not in Magadha. It is possible that Ripuñjaya might have been treacherously murdered by his minister but he was succeeded by Bimbisāra, the founder of the Magadhan empire : BVB'S Vedic Age, P. 328

3. The list of Kings of the Pradyota dynasty differs considerably from Pargiter's in The Purāṇa Text of the Dynasties of the Kali Age.

2ndly, The Pradyotas did not supplant the Bārhadhrathas & rule over Magadha. The Śiśunāgas did it and it was Bimbisāra who founded the Śiśunāga dynasty and not Śiśunāga. The Pradyotas ruled at Avanti. Caṇḍa

6. He son will be Vidhisāra who will have Ajātaśatru as his son. His son will be Darbhaka while the future son of Darbhaka is Ajaya.

7. Nandivardhana will be the son of Ajaya, while Mahānandi will be the son of Nandivardhana. In this way, there will be ten kings from the Śiśunāga dynasty which will rule (Magadha) for three hundred and sixty years.<sup>1</sup>

8. O mighty Kuru, in the Kali age, they will enjoy the earth to that much period of time. The son of Mahānandi, a mighty king, will be born from the womb of a Śūdra woman.

9. He will be a certain Nanda, the master of a mahāpadma (treasury) and an exterminator of Kṣatriyas. After him, all kings will be as bad as Śūdras and irreligious.

10. Like another Paraśurāma<sup>2</sup>, the Scion of the Bhṛgu race, Mahāpadma will rule over the entire earth under one sceptre (or royal umbrella) and his command will never be violated by any one.

Pradyota, Udayana, Bimbisāra Ajātaśatru were in a way contemporaries of Mahāvira & the Buddha and the historical information available shows that Pradyotas did not intervene the Bṛhadratha & Śiśunāga dynasties of Magadha.

1. There are some similarities in the names of the descendants of Śiśunāgas as given in the Bh. P. and Pargiter's Purāṇa Text List. But instead of Bimbisāra, being the historical founder of the Śiśunāga dynasty, he is represented as the 5th & Ajātaśatru as the 6th descendant of Śiśunāga in the Bh. P.

2. The apparent similarity between Mahāpadma and Paraśurāma is limited to putting an end to the dominance of traditional Kṣatriya families. Mahāpadma, perhaps being insulted by blue-blooded ancient Kṣatriya Kings because of his birth from a Śūdra woman, seems to have made it his policy to eliminate the dominance of these ancient Kṣatriya rulers. Hence this apparent similarity. The account of Mahāpadma as recorded by the Greek author Curtius makes him the son of a barber. Jains (Parīṣiṣṭaparvan Avatyaka-Sūtra) confirm Curtius. The Buddhist texts (Mahāvamsaśīkā) regard Nandas as of 'un-known lineage' (aññāta-kula). This unanimous tradition confirms the low origin of Mahāpadma—which is a title meaning 'a lord of infinite army' or 'of immense wealth.' His real name is Ugrasena according to the Mahābodhivamsa (and it is confirmed by Greeks).

11. It is traditionally reported, that Mahāpadma will have eight sons of whom Sumālya was prominent. These kings will enjoy this earth for one hundred years.

12. A certain Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> on whom the nine Nandas were completely dependent (and practically at his mercy) will uproot them. After their extermination, the Mauryas<sup>2</sup> will enjoy the sovereignty of the earth in the Kali age.

13. That very Brāhmaṇa, it is reported, will crown Candragupta. His son will be Vārisāra whose son will be Aśokavardhana.

14. Aśokavardhana's son will be Suyāśas who will beget Saṅgata. From Saṅgata will be born Śāliśuka whose son was Somaśarmā.

15-16. From his loins will be born Śatadhanvan and his son will be Bṛhadratha. Thus there will be these ten Maurya kings<sup>3</sup> who will enjoy the kingdom of this world for one hundred thirty seven years.

1. ŚR names him as Kauṭilya, Vātsyāyana or Cāṇakya. But Cāṇakya or Viṣṇugupta who uprooted that dynasty was their sworn enemy and he outwitted and out-manoeuvred Rākṣasa and destroyed Nandas. Can this be Rākṣasa, the trusted but gullible minister of Nandas (vide Mudrā-Rākṣasa) on whom Nandas depended completely.

2. VJ is obviously quoting a wrong tradition that Mauryas were the descendants of Murā and belonged to the low caste of fishermen. Now it is accepted that Candragupta belonged to the Kṣātriya class of Moriyas ruling over Pippalivana (Probably in U.P.)—BVB's The Age of Imperial Unity, pp. 17 and 56.

3. According to VP 4.24.28-32 the Mauryan kings are : (1) Candragupta, (2) Bindusāra, (3) Aśoka-var dhana, (4) Suyāśas (5) Daśaratha (not mentioned in Bh. P.) (6) Saṁyuta (7) Śāliśuka (8) Somaśarmā, (9) Śatadhanvā (10) Bṛhadratha. Pargiter's Purāṇa Text list mentioned above shows much discrepancy about the number, names and order of the Mauryan kings; Bh. P. agrees with the combined versions of Matsya and Vāyu Purāṇas. Out of these different names of Aśoka's successors, the reality of Daśaratha is established by his three inscriptions on Nāgārjuni hills. Jain texts treat Samprati (mentioned in Matsya P.) as a patron of Jainism as Aśoka was that of Buddhism. King Śāliśuka is mentioned in the Gārgi-Saṁhitā. No Purāṇa or Buddhist source claims Candragupta, the founder of the dynasty, as Jaina (even a convert). The final coup in 187 B.C. managed by Puṣyamitra ended the Maurya Rule—(For details vide the Age of Imperial Unity).

16A. (Having killed the Maurya king Brhadratha, his commander-in-chief of the army Puṣyamitra of Śuṅga race<sup>1</sup> will be the ruler himself). Puṣya mitra's son will be Agnimitra to whom Sujyeṣṭha will be born.

17. His son will be Vasumitra who will beget Bhadraka who will have Pulinda as his son. His son will be Ghōṣa to whom will be born Vajramitra as the son.

18. The next ruling prince will be Bhāgavata from whom will be born Devabhūti as it is reported. These ten Śuṅga kings<sup>2</sup> will enjoy the kingship of the earth for a little over a hundred years.

19-20. Later on, O king Parikṣit, the earth will pass under the control of the Kaṇva dynasty of every poor merit. Having killed the dissolute monarch Devabhūti Śuṅga (through a female slave), the highly intelligent Vasudeva himself will rule over the earth. His son will be Bhūmitra whose son will be Nārāyaṇa. Nārāyaṇa will have a famous son called Suśarmā.

21. In this way, kings of the Kaṇva dynasty will enjoy rulership of the earth for fortyfive years from 75 B.C. to 30 B.C. though the Purāṇic statement is three hundred fortyfive years of the Kali age.

22. Murdering king Suśarmā of the Kaṇva dynasty, his low born servant Balī<sup>3</sup> of the Āndhra race, one of the wretched most persons, will rule over the earth for some time.

1. Not in SR's text. Strangely enough VJ thinks Śuṅga as the proper name and Puṣyamitra his caste.

2. The list of Śuṅga kings in the Bh. P. concurs fairly well with Pargiter's Purāṇa text list. But the Bh. P. states ten as the number of Śuṅga kings but actually names nine kings. ŚR however clarifies that Puṣyamitra, the commander-in-chief of Brhadratha Maurya, who was killed by Puṣyamitra should be regarded as the 1st Śuṅga king and thus makes the number of kings ten. ŚR states that the period of this dynasty was 112 years. Thus the Śuṅgas ruled from circa B.C. 187 to 75 B.C. This dynasty did not only stem the tide of Greek and other foreign invaders but rejuvenated Hinduism by performing an Aśvamedha sacrifice. The spread of Bhāgavatism under them is remarkable.

—BVB. Age of Imp. Unity, pp 95-99

3. The author of the Bh. P. does not know that his real name is Simuka and uses the adjective 'Powerful'. As Pargiter's Dynasties of the Kali Age (DKA) (P. 38, Notes 14, 16) shows, other Purāṇas use similar adjectives balīyas, balī with reference to Simuka. The consensus of Purāṇas on 'Simuka'

23. After him his brother called Kṛṣṇa will be the next king. His son will be Śāntakarna and his son Paurṇamāsa

24. Lambodara will be his son and from him will be born king Cibilaka. He will beget Meghasvāti whose son will be Aṭamāna.

25. Anistakarmā and Hāleya will then follow. Hāleya's son will be Talaka. He will beget Purīṣabhīru who will be succeeded by his son king Sunandana.

26. Sunandana will have a son called Cakora who will be succeeded by eight sons known as Bahus collectively, the youngest of them being Śivasvāti, the vanquisher of enemies. He will beget a son called Gomatī-putra whose son will be Purīman.

27. The succession of princes after Purīman will be Medaḥśiras, Śivaskanda, his son Yajñaśrī and his prince Vijaya and his successors Candravijña and Salomadhi.

28. These thirty kings<sup>1</sup> will enjoy the sovereignty of the world for four hundred and fifty six years, O delight of the Kuru race.

as the name of this king is confirmed by numismatics and in Buhler's List of Brāhmī Inscriptions. The author of the Bh. P. seems to be a staunch orthodox Brāhmaṇa, so like Candragupta Maurya, Simuka or Bali is called Vṛṣala though his descendants like Gautami-putra Śātakarṇi (in Nasik inscriptions) assume the title eka-Brāhmaṇa (the unique Brāhmaṇa). The prejudice against Āndhras as Dasyus dates from the Āitareya Brāhmaṇa. Simuka is called Rājā Simuka-Sātavāhana and as the legend goes Sātavāhanas or Śālivāhanas were of mixed Brāhmaṇa and Nāga origins (Dvātrimśat-Puttalikā). The epigraphic evidence of the associations of Sātavāhanas with Śakas and Nāgas shows that the orthodox Brāhmaṇas regarded them as vṛṣalas or degraded Brāhmaṇas or outcastes despite Sātavāhana's claim to Brāhmaṇahood—The Age of Imp. Unity, pp. 106-107, etc.

1. The Bh. P. actually enumerates 23 kings though in conformity with other Purāṇas, the number of kings is stated as thirty. Pargiter's single unified list of Purāṇa Text (DKA pp. 38-43, 71-72) and his co-ordinated list (DKA-36) show differences in names of the kings. The list of 30 kings as given in Matsya P. is quoted in The Age of Imp. Unity, pp. 706-707.

Viṣṇu P. (4.24.5) correctly calls these kings Āndhrabhṛtyas, for after the Āndhras probably (as happened in the case of Śuṅgas and Kanvas) the servants of the Āndhra rulers became the rulers and came to be known as such.

29. At their capital Avabhṛti<sup>1</sup>, seven Ābhīra princes will rule the earth, ten kings of Gardhabhī dynasty and sixteen of the Kaṅka (Śaka) race—all of them very greedy and lewd will hold the sway.

30. They will be succeeded by eight Yavana rulers (Bactrian Greeks), and fourteen kings of the Turuṣka race. Again there will be ten kings of Guruṇḍa (Probably Maruṇḍas vide DKA P.45) race and eleven of the Mauna (Hūṇa) dynasty.

31-33. These kings (beginning from Ābhīras upto Maunas, viz. sixtyfive kings will enjoy the sovereignty of the earth for (a total of) one thousand ninety-nine years<sup>2</sup> And the eleven Mauna (Hūṇa) kings will rule over the earth for three hundred years, O king. When their dynasty ended, at the capital town of Kilikila, kings Bhūtananda, Vaṅgiri Śiśunandi and his famous warrior brother Yaśanandi will reign for one hundred and six years.<sup>3</sup>

34. They will have thirteen sons called Bāhlīkas. Then will rule the Ksatriya Prince Puṣya-mitra and his son Dumitra.

35. All these will be contemporary kings ruling over different states. Seven of these will be the rulers of Āndhra and seven kings of Kosal. The kings of Vidūra and Nisadha also will be out of these Bāhlīkas.

36. There will be a king of Magadhas called Viśvasphūrji. He will be well known as Purañjaya the second. He will reduce the higher castes to the status of Pulindas, Yadus and Madrakas.<sup>4</sup>

1. ŚR is simply offering a conjecture when he explains 'Āvabhṛtyas,' as the rulers of Avabhṛti.

2. The above four verses, viz. 29-33 mention some local dynasties. References to other Purāṇas and Pargiter's DKA (Dynasty of the Kali Age) show that some of them were contemporaries. Hence the duration of these dynasties viz. 1099 years as given in the Bh. P. is not correct. In fact, the author of this chapter of the Bh. P. is less critical and relies on hearsay evidence. Some of these are foreign tribes viz. Śakas (called Kaṅkas in the Bh. P.) and Hūṇas (called Maunas here).

3. Compare DKA : Dynasties of 3rd Cent. A D.—pp. 50-53.

4. BVB. AGE Imp. Unity regards Viśvasphūrji as a foreign ruler of Magadha, p. 177 Ft. Note No. 3.

ŚR gives Viśvasphūrji the credit of creating the subcastes like Pulindas.

37. That powerful but wicked-minded prince will establish a caste-less society where there will be no reverence to Vedas and Brāhmaṇas. He will exterminate the Kṣatriyas as well. In his capital city of Padmāvati, he will enjoy a well-guarded state from Haradwar to Prayāga in the valley of the Gaṅgā.

38. The twice-born castes of Saurāṣṭra, Avanti, Ābhīra, Śūra, Arbuda and Mālava countries will become fallen (due to lapse or non-performance of saṁskāras, such as the investiture of the sacred thread) and the rulers of these people will be mostly of Śūdra castes.

39. Śūdras, persons fallen from higher castes, Mlecchas all bereft of Vedic culture and way of life—will be the rulers over the banks of the Sindhu and the Candrabhāgā (the Chinab), the city of Kaunti and the region of Kāśmīra.

40. O Parīkṣit ! All these contemporary kings will be as good as Mlecchas, bent on unrighteousness, falsehood, miserly and ferocious.

41. (With no compunctions) they will murder women, children, Brāhmaṇas, slaughter cows. They will covet after the women and property of others. Subject to vicissitudes of fate and overwhelmed with joy or grief, they will be poor in strength and of short duration of life.

42. Devoid of culture or purificatory ceremonies (right from inception) of righteous deeds and dominated by rajas and tamas, these Mlecchas in the guise of Kṣatriyas will exploit their own subjects.

43. The subjects inhabiting those lands will emulate their rulers in their habits, character, way of talking and coming in conflict with each other as well as their rulers, will perish.

CHAPTER TWO

The Evils of the Kali Age

Śrī Śuka began to narrate:

1. Thereafter, day after day, under the force of the inexorably powerful Time, righteousness, truth, purity, (both physical and mental), forbearance, mercy, duration of life, physical power, and sharpness of memory shall go deteriorating.

2. In the Kali age, wealth alone will be the deciding factor of nobility of birth, righteous behaviour or merits. And only brute force will be the only standard in the arrangement or decision of what is righteous or just.

3. Mutual liking (and not family pedigree, social status etc.) will be the criterion of selecting a partner of life in marriage; cheating is the order of the day in business relations; satisfaction of the sexual pleasure is the only consideration of masculine or feminine excellence and worthiness and wearing of the sacred thread (Yajñopavita) (and not the pious behaviour or Vedic or Śāstric learning) is the outward index of Brāhmaṇahood.

4. External marks (such as a staff, deer-hide) and not the observance of the vows and restrictions of a particular Āśrama (or stage of life) has been the only index of a particular Āśrama of a person and is the only guide to greet mutually when they meet each other. Justice has become weak and partial through the inability of the party to bribe these administering it<sup>1</sup>; and garrulity has been the hall-mark of scholarship.

5. Want of affluence is the cause of one's impiety or bad name while hypocrisy is the index of goodness. Mutual consent and not the Śāstric way) is enough for marriage. And mere toilet alone is a substitute for bathing.

6. To go to distant place of sacred waters (and not attendance on one's preceptors or elders) is looked upon as pilgrimage and wearing long hair a sign of beauty. The highest purpose of life is to fill one's belly and arrogant audacity (and not the statement of the facts as they are) is regarded as veracity.

1. Poverty will prevent the party from getting justice—ŚR.

7-8. Maintenance of one's family will be looked upon as skill; It is for self-advertisement of one's fame of piety that righteous deeds are to be performed; In this way the whole world will be populated by wicked people: and he who among Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas and Śūdras, becomes the mightiest will be the ruler.

9. When the subjects are deprived of their women and looted of the wealth by greedy, merciless, robberlike Kṣatriyas the subjects will seek shelter in mountains and forests and subsist on leaves, roots, meat, honey, fruits, flowers and seeds (and such forest-products).

10. Being oppressed by draughts or famines and heavy taxation and being subjected to excessive cold, biting winds, (blistering) sunshine, (driving) downpour of rain, snowfall, mutual rivalry, the people are going to perish.

11. People will be tormented by hunger, thirst and diseases and will be overpowered with anxieties. And the maximum span of human life in the Kali age will be fifty (lit. thirty plus twenty) years.

12. When through the evil effect of the Kali age, the physical bodies of embodied beings become emaciated and reduced, the prescribed ordinances of the Vedic path pertaining to different classes of people and stages of life become lost.

13. When (in the Kali age) religion will be predominantly heretical, and kings will be as good as robbers and men will be earning their livelihood by theft, (economic offences) mendacity, wanton violence to life and such other pursuits.

14. When all classes of the society (Varṇas) will be as good as Śūdras, cows will be reduced to the size of she-goats (in yield of milk also); all Āśramas (stages of life) will merge in the householder's stage of life (there being no celibates or recluses) and the term "relative" will connote the relations of the wife only.

15. Medicinal herbs will have minimal efficacy; big trees will be stunted (and would afford neither shade nor relief) like the Śamī trees; the clouds will be giving lightning flashes and clapping of thunders (but no rain) and the houses will be desolate (as there will be no hospitality as it was in previous ages).

16. In this way, when people have undergone such hardships—just at the end of the Kali age, the Lord will incarnate himself in his Sāttvika form for the protection of religion.

17. Lord Viṣṇu is the Creator and Preceptor of the mobile and immobile creation. He is the Controller of the world and the inner Soul abiding in all beings. His advent (on the earth) is for the protection of the path of righteousness and for wiping out all the Karmas of the righteous and to lead them to Final Emancipation from Samśāra.

18. It is in the houses of Viṣṇuyaśas, the noble-souled Brāhmaṇa chief of the village called Śambhala<sup>1</sup>, that Lord Kalki will be incarnated.

19-20. The Lord of the Universe, endowed with eight Spiritual powers (like aṇimā, etc.) and excellences (like solemnity of vows or truthfulness) was unsurpassed in splendour and glory. Riding on a fleet horse called Devadatta, he would traverse over the whole earth on the horse; will massacre with his sword capable of subjugating the crores and crores of robbers and wicked miscreants who posed themselves as kings.

21. (To indicate the beginning of the Golden Age—Kṛta Age) Thereupon, when the entire class of robbers, thieves and such enemies of the society is annihilated both in the town and in the country, the minds of the rural and urban population become pure by the touch of the wind wafting the sacred fragrance of pigments on the person of Lord Vāsudeva.

22. When the glorious Lord Vāsudeva, the very embodiment of strength, is enthroned in their heart, their progeny will naturally be extremely powerful.

23. When Lord Hari the Protector of righteousness, will descend on this earth as Kalki, there will be the advent of the Kṛta Age (Golden Age), and the children who will be born thereafter will be of pious (Sāttvika) disposition.

1. A village near Moradabad in Rohilkhand, 80 miles to the east of Delhi. It is 'Sambalaka' according to Ptolemy.

24. When the Moon, the Sun and the Jupiter are in conjunction in the same zodiacal house and the star Puṣya is in ascendance, the Kṛta age dawns.<sup>1</sup>

25. All the kings belonging to the Lunar and Solar dynasties who have ruled in the past, or are reigning at present or will govern in the future, have been briefly described to you.

26. The period commencing from the birth of your worship to the coronation of Nanda would come to one thousand one hundred and fifteen years.<sup>2</sup>

27-28. Of the seven stars comprising the constellation the Great Bear, two of those asterisms come to view first., in the east (viz. Pulaha and Kratu). Midway between them in the north-western line, is noticed a star or a constellation (of the group of Aśvini, Bharani, etc.) at night. Those Heavenly Sages i.e. the stars Pulaha and Kratu remain associated with that intervening constellation for a period of one hundred human years. Those Sages (stars) are now associated with Maghā during your reign.

29. When (the Maghās were in that position) the self-illuminating personality comprised of pure Sattva of Lord Viṣṇu who came to be known as Śrī Kṛṣṇa retired to his region,

1. ŚR : Here the simultaneous entry of these planets is indicated. Otherwise every twelfth year when the Jupiter is in the zodiacal sign of Cancer, there are at least two or three New Moon days when this phenomenon occurs. Hence Simultaneous entry of these three planets is the sine qua non of Kṛta Age.

2. As ŚR. notes this statement is ambiguous. But the author of the Bh. P. is not much at fault, as we have not yet been able to fix the date of the Mahābhārata War. Pargiter, on the basis of various statements in Purāṇas has tentatively suggested 950 B. C. as the date of that war. But Jayaswal, A.C. Das and other Indian scholars favour 1500 B.C. Pusalkar in BVB's Vedic Age (p. 273) concedes 1400 B.C. as the date of the Kuru-Pāṇḍava War. The discussion of the date of the Mahābhārata war is beyond the scope of this note. But I still believe in Ray Chaudhari's evidence presented in his Political History of Ancient India from the Accession of Parikṣit to the Extinction of the Gupta Dynasty, p. 9, 1923, and regard Parikṣit as belonging to 900 B.C. This date has no relation with the composition of the present text of the Bh. P. as shown in Intro. to Volume I of the Bh.P.

Kali immediately entered the world and people began to take delight in sinful ways.

30. While the Lord of the goddess Lakṣmī used to touch the earth with his lotus-feet, till then Kali did not dare to encroach upon the earth.

31. When those seven Divine Sages (Ursa Major) enter the constellation Maghā, there will be the advent of Kali lasting for twelve hundred celestial years (i.e. 432,000 human years).

32. When these Great Sages (the asterisms, constituting the Great Bear) will proceed from Maghā to Pūrvāṣāḍhā, Kali will be more powerful since the ascension of king Mahāpadma Nanda.

33. Experts in ancient Lore have stated that on the very day—nay at that very hour—Lord Kṛṣṇa retired to his region, the Kali Age has set in.

34. At the termination of the period of one thousand divine years of the fourth i.e. Kali age, the Kṛta age will dawn again and the minds of men will get the revelation of the Self from within.

35. Just as the career or ups and downs in the history of Manu's race has been described, in each age, the history of Vaiśyas, Śūdras and Brāhmaṇas in various ages should be understood to be similar to them (age after age).

36. It is only the names of the noble-souled persons described so far and of whom (neither kingdom nor race survives except) the legendary account enshrining them remains, (nothing but) their fame only survives, on the earth.

37. Devāpi, the brother of Śantanu, and Maru, the descendant of the Ikṣvāku race—both of them possess very great Yogic powers and are still living in village called Kalāpa (Near Badarikāśrama in the Himālayas).

38. At the end of the Kali age, both of them, under the instructions and command of Lord Vāsudeva, will come forward and will promulgate and establish the ancient religious order with its institution of Varṇas (Classes of people) and Āśramas (Stages of life) once again as before.

39. This cycle of four Yugas (Ages) viz. Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali runs in this order on the earth for the sake of created beings.

40. O king Parīkṣit, these kings described by me and many others (not mentioned by me) all claimed that the earth was theirs. But ultimately they had to leave it and passed away.

41. The physical body which (when alive) is designated as King is ultimately called worms (if buried or left uninterred and is turned into worms), or “Excrement” (if eaten by beasts or birds of prey and after digestion or non-digestion thrown out as faeces) or Ashes (if cremated). It is for this body that one perpetrates sins and commits violence against living beings. Does he not know that this sinful conduct leads to hell ?

42. How will this entire earth held under their own (undisputed sovereignty) by my forefathers and now held under my sceptre, pass on the same way to my son and grandson and his race ?

43. Rulers who are unwise (indulge in such thoughts anxiously), look upon their physical body made up of heat, water and food as their Soul, and the earth as their personal property, ultimately quitting them both, sink into oblivion.

44. O Parīkṣit, All those lords of the earth who enjoy the earth by dint of their personal power, have been reduced by Time to mere themes of stories when people narrate the past events.

CHAPTER THREE

Dharma (Righteous Way of Life) in every Yuga : Efficacy of God's Name

Śrī Śuka said :

1. Perceiving how kings are eagerly occupied with the plans of conquering her, this earth laughs at them saying, “How stupid ! These kings who themselves are but playthings of ( the god of ) Death aspire to conquer me !

2. Though they are aware (of the inevitability of death) these kings have reposed over-confidence in (the longevity of) their personal body which is momentary like a bubble of water. Hence the ambition or desire of these rulers of men is definitely futile.

3-4. (They plan in their minds):

“Having first conquered the group of six (Five cognitive senses+Mind) of our own self, we shall subjugate the counsellors, executive officers, relatives or confidants, citizens, conductors of elephants or army officers of other kings and then after removing all “thorns” (socially undesirable elements), we shall thus gradually bring under our control the earth engirdled by the seas.” These kings whose hearts are thus tied down to their hopes and desires, do not perceive the god of Death who is near (and ready to snatch them away).

5. Having conquered me as far as the sea, some of them (being more ambitious) enter the sea (for naval victory and conquest of other island-continents). “Of what importance is this conquest against our self-control? Emancipation from Samsāra is the proper reward of self-control.”<sup>1</sup>

6. O scion of the Kuru race ! These foolish kings wish to conquer me through war, when great Manus and their sons and descendants had ultimately to abandon me and to depart as they came (leaving me here behind).

7. Feuds and fights for me break out between fathers and sons, and between brothers and between those wicked Kings whose minds are possessed with the notion of mine-ness with reference to their kingdoms.

8. “This entire earth belongs to me only and not yours, O fool. “Contending and competing thus, kings kill each other and die for my sake.”

9-12. Pṛthu, Purūravas, Gādhi, Nahuṣa, Bharata, Arjuna (of a thousand arms—Sahasrārjuna), Māndhātā, Sagara, Rāma,

1. ŚR. : Extremely dull-witted are they who desire to attain sovereignty by practising control over senses.

GS : Sovereignty being transitory is an insignificant gain as a result of self-control; emancipation from the misery of Samsāra is the real recompense, for it is eternal.

Khaṭvāṅga, Dhundhumāra, Raghu, Tṛṇa-bindu, Yayāti, Śaryāti, Śantanu, Gaya, Bhagīratha, Kuvalayāśva, Kākutstha, Nala (the king of Niṣadha), Nṛga, Hiraṇya-Kaśipu, Vṛtra, Rāvaṇa, the scourge of the people (who made people to cry), Namuci, Śambara, Naraka, Hiraṇyākṣa and Tāraka, and many other Daityas and Kings who were the emperors of the world, all possessed of knowledge, valiant, vanquishers of all others but of themselves, remained unconquered.

13. Though they were mortal by nature, they cherished the strongest attachment to me as if I belonged to them. But they were frustrated in accomplishing their desires, and were reduced as names in legends, by the inexorable Time or Death, O King.

14. O King Parīkṣit ! It is with the intention of elucidating (the knowledge of) the unsubstantial nature of the world and to create (a sense of) renunciation about it, that these legends of those illustrious persons who after spreading their great renown in this world, had passed away, have been narrated to you. And all this (picturesque) narration is not mere display of words but bears vital relation to the highest truth !<sup>1</sup>

15. But if a person is desirous of attaining pure (selfless) devotion unto Lord Kṛṣṇa he should incessantly listen every day to the exposition of the excellent attributes and great deeds of the Lord of hallowing renown (viz. Viṣṇu) which are always glorified in songs (by his votaries and pious persons) and which destroy all evils and inauspiciousness.

King Parīkṣit enquired :

(Thinking that devotion unto the Lord cannot be engendered due to the evil influence of the Kali age, the King asks)

1. Although respectable annotators like SR. VR. interpret quite to the contrary, viz. 'The non-relation of these legends to the highest or real purpose', I feel that the explanation of GS, suits the context better, despite the next verse which contrasts the difference between the glory of these kings and that of the incarnations of Viṣṇu and exhorts one to listen to the glory of Lord Kṛṣṇa constantly.

16. “Be pleased to explain to me (in details) the course resorting to which, people can shake off and destroy the accumulated evils of the Kali in the Kali age itself, O revered sage !

17. Kindly tell me (something) about the Yugas (the Ages or Aeons), the special course of duties prescribed for each Yuga, the duration of the life and the deluge (Pralaya) of the universe, the course of the omnipotent Time-spirit which is the potency of the great-souled Lord Viṣṇu.”

Śrī Śuka began to narrate :

18. In the Kṛta Age, Dharma (righteous course of conduct) as adhered to by the people of that age, proceeds on all its four legs. And Truth, compassion, penance, (selfcontrol and meditation) and affording protection to all (irrespective of friendly or inimical relations) are the four legs of that Perfect Dharma, O King.

19. The people of that age were generally full of contentment and compassion, friendly to all beings, serene and peaceful, self-controlled, forbearing, finding spiritual bliss in their souls, looking upon all as equals (and practising no discrimination between their people and others) and engaging themselves in spiritual exercises such as meditation, etc.

20. In the Tretā Age, one-fourth part of each of the leg of Dharma gets gradually disabled by each of the four legs of Adharma (unrighteousness) viz., falsehood violence, discontent and discords respectively.

21. In that age, people were keen on performance of Vedic rites and were devoted to austere penance. (The five sins—pañca-śūnās—in the life of a house-holder are inevitable but people were not given to too much of violence. Nor were they lewd or addicted to the pleasure of senses. They used to exert for the first three purposes of human life, viz. Dharma (religious merit), Artha (wealth) and Kāma (worldly pleasures, enjoyment). They were sincerely devoted to and advanced in Vedic studies, and Brāhmaṇas were regarded to be the highest Varṇa (class of society).

22. In the Dvāpara age, the four feet of the Dharma, viz. Penance, Truthfulness, Compassion and Protective and charitable attitude to all diminish by half with (the growing influence of) the four characteristics of unrighteousness (adharma) viz. violence, discontent or covetousness, falsehood and hatred.

23. In that age, people hankered after fame or glory, were prone to the performance of great sacrifices, indulging in the teaching and the study of the Vedas, endowed with great affluence, maintaining big families, joyous by nature. Brāhmaṇas and Kṣātriyas were then the most important classes of society.

24. In the Kali age, only one quarter of each of the four feet of Dharma remains. And that too goes on diminishing day by day by the powerfully increasing 'feet' of Adharma (unrighteousness) to such an extent that ultimately it becomes extinct.

25. In that (Kali) age, people will be greedy, take to wicked behaviour, will be merciless, indulge in hostilities without any cause, unfortunate, extremely covetous for wealth and women (or worldly desires) and higher social status will be attained by Śūdras, fishermen and such other (former backward) classes.

26: The attributes viz. Sattva, rajas and tamas become manifest in men. And being impelled by the force of the Time-spirit, their influence varies (waxes or wanes).

27. When the mind, intellect and sense-organs are dominated by Sattva and when there is genuine liking for (spiritual) wisdom and knowledge and performance of asceticism, one should know that it is the Kṛta age.

28. O intelligent king ! When embodied beings (people) show devotion and liking for the first three purposes of human life, viz. dharma, artha and Kāma and the attribute called rajas controls the attitude of people, note that that is the Treta Age.

29. When the time (i.e. the attitude of people) is controlled by a mixture of rajas and tamas, and when greed, discontent, pride, hypocrisy, jealousy predominate and men like to perform religious acts for achieving desirable ends, it is the Dvāpara Age.

30. When deceit, falsehood, lethargy, sleepiness, violence, despondency, grief, delusion, fear, poverty-stricken-ness prevail, that is the Kali Age which is characterised by tamas.

31. As a result of Kali's influence, mortal beings become dull-witted, unlucky, voracious, destitute of wealth yet voluptuous, and women, wanton and unchaste.

32. Countries will be ravaged by robbers and miscreants; the Vedas will be condemned by heretics; kings will exploit the subjects (lit. Rulers will be men-eaters), and twice-borns like Brāhmaṇas will be given to the gratification of their sexual desires and other appetites (lit. filling the belly).

33. Celibates ( belonging to the Brahmacarya stage of life) will cease to observe their prescribed vows of study, purity and celibacy; householders (in stead of helping others by alms-giving ) will take to begging; hermits (of the Vānaprastha stage will leave forests where they retire for penance), will resort to villages (and towns) and Sannyāsins will be extremely greedy of money.

34. Women will be short-statured but voracious, noted for fecundity and shameless. They will be harsh-speakers, given to theft, fraud and dare-devilry.

35. Petty-minded people (with no moral values) conduct business transactions and merchants will be fraudulent. Even when there is no emergency or imminent danger people will follow trades or pursuits censured by the righteous.

36. Servants will resign their services of the masters who are excellent in all respects but have become penniless. Masters will dismiss even their hereditary servants when they are in distress (through physical disability, etc. ) and people will not maintain cows when they cease to yield milk.

37. In the Kali age, men will abandon their parents, brothers, friends and relatives and establish their friendliness on sexual basis. Their affection being centred on their relation with women, they will seek consultations from their wives' relatives (such as sisters and brothers-in-laws) and will be miserable.

38. Earning their livelihood under the guise (and make-up) of recluses and sages, Śūdras will accept charities. People ignorant of religion, will occupy high seats (and pulpits) and will (pose to) preach religion.

39. People will have their minds weighed down with constant anxiety and fear, due to devastating famines and heavy taxation. The land being devoid of food-crops, people will be always afflicted with the impending fear of droughts.

40. Being destitute of clothing, food, drink, bed, sexual satisfaction, bath and adornments, people in the Kali age, will appear like ghosts.

41. In the Kali age, even for a paltry amount of a Kāki-nikā ( 20 cowries ), people will fight, throwing to winds all friendliness and good will. They will even kill their own relatives or give up their dear lives (commit suicide for such a petty amount).

42. People will not protect even their aged parents. Low-minded persons bent on satisfying their sex and filling the belly will not care for their sons even though they may be clever and skilful in all respects.

43. O King ! During the Kali age, the minds of the human beings being perverted by heretic doctrines<sup>1</sup> will not generally worship Lord Acyuta, the supreme Father and Preceptor of the worlds, the lotus-feet of whom are bowed by the lords of the three worlds.

44. During the Kali age, people will not worship the Lord by uttering unawares whose name even unconsciously, a dying man or a person afflicted (with care or disease), falling or trembling, becomes absolved and free from all the impediments of Karmas and attains to the highest goal (viz. mokṣa-emancipation from saṁsāra).

45. The Supreme Person, the glorious Lord Viṣṇu abides in the hearts of all and dispels all the evils of men arising out of the influence of Kali from substances, place and mind.

46. If the Lord enthroned in the heart (of all) is listened to or glorified (by chanting his name or singing his glory) or meditated upon, worshipped or even paid respect to (by some other way), he shakes off (and thus absolves man of) his sins committed and accumulated in thousands of births.

1. VJ takes this opportunity to hit at the advaitins and explains Pakhaṇḍa-Vibhinna-Cetasaḥ as 'those whose minds are deluded by the heretical doctrine known as advaita-sāstra.

47. Even as the fire applied to gold burns off and thus destroys all the impurities or metallic alloys mixed with gold, Lord Viṣṇu who is abiding in the heart (or Soul) destroys all evil thoughts (or sins) in the hearts of Yogins.

48. The inner heart of a man does not attain that much absolute purity by means of (Vedic or Śāstric) learning, penance, breath-control (prāṇāyāma), sense of friendliness to all beings, ablutions in sacred waters, observance of vows, giving of (munificent) charitable gifts and muttering silently (His prayer), as it does by (meditating upon) the infinite Lord who is enthroned in the heart.

49. Hence, O King Parīkṣit, with all your power of concentration, enthrone Lord Keśava in your heart. Meditating upon him with full concentration at the time of death, you will attain the highest goal (viz. Mokṣa).

50. This glorious Lord who is the supreme Ruler of the universe should be meditated upon with full concentration, by persons who are about to die. Dear Parīkṣit ! He is the Soul and supporter of all. He leads them to the state of being one with him.

51. Kali is certainly the Store-house of all evils. But O king, there is one very great virtue and a good point in that age, inasmuch as by singing the name and the glory of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, that person is freed from all attachments and attains to the highest region (Vaikuṇṭha).

52. What one achieves by meditating upon Lord Viṣṇu in the Kṛta age, by performance of sacrifices in the Tretā age, by worship and service of the Lord in the Dvāpara Age, a person attains that in the Kali age by chanting the name of Hari.

CHAPTER FOUR

1. The divisions of Time commencing from its minutest unit (Paramāṇu) and ending with the period forming the life-span of god Brahmā (consisting of two parārdhas) have been described to you, O King. The duration of four Yugas also has been narrated to you. Now listen to the periods of Kalpa (a span of time for the round of creation and subsistence of the world) and Laya (The period of the dissolution) of universe.)

2. The period consisting of a thousand revolutions of the Yugas (viz. Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali) is called one day (in the life) of god Brahmā. This period is known as a Kalpa, during which fourteen Manus successively reign over the world, O protector of men.

3. At the end of that period, there is an equally long period of dissolution of the universe (Pralaya). It is called the night (in the life) of god Brahmā. At the end of the Kalpa, these three worlds become due for dissolution and get dissolved.

4. This dissolution (Pralaya) is called occasional<sup>2</sup> (as it is caused by the occasion of the sleep of god Brahmā). During this period, Lord Nārāyaṇa, the Creator of the universe, withdraws all the universe within himself and goes to sleep on the bed of Ananta's (the serpent Śeṣa's) body. And so does god Brahmā.

5. When the period of two Parārdha<sup>3</sup> years forming the span of life of the highest god Brahmā, comes to a close, the

1. SR explains that pralaya (dissolution) is four-fold, naimittika (occasional) Prākṛtika (pertaining to the primordial matter), ātyantika (everlasting) and nitya (constant or eternal). And all these are described in this Chapter.

2. As this Pralaya of three worlds takes place due to the condition of Brahmā's sleep, it is called 'conditional' or 'occasional'—naimittika—SR.)

3. *One Parārdha = 100,000,000,000,000,000 years.

seven Prakṛtis or causal principles of the universe (viz. mahat or cosmic intelligence, ahamkāra the cosmic I-ness or ego and the five tan-mātrās—subtle elements) become due to be dissolved (and are so withdrawn) into Prakṛti or Primordial Matter. (Hence, it is called Prākṛtika).

6. O King ! this is called the dissolution pertaining to Prakṛti or primordial Matter. For in this Pralaya, the universe or Brahmāṇḍa which is the product of the causes enumerated as seven Prakṛtis above, gets finally dissolved as the occasion of the dissolution of these causes arrives.

7. (At that time) the god of rains does not send any shower of rain on the earth for one hundred years. Then the earth becomes bereft of food-grains and beings, tormented by hunger, prey upon and eat one another.

8. Thus harassed by the Time-Spirit, the creatures gradually perish. The fierce sun ending the world (known as Sāmvartika) with its terribly scorching rays, drinks up (evaporates) all liquid (water) that is in the seas, the humids in the body and all moisture and under-ground water on the earth and does not release a drop of it.

9. Then the cosmos-destructive fire emanating from the (thousand mouths of) Śaṅkarṣaṇa (the serpent Śeṣa) raging ablaze, burns down all sub-terranean regions which have been already desolate.

10. The egg of the universe is ablaze from above, below and on all sides by the flames of fire (issuing from below from Śaṅkarṣaṇa's mouth) and the scorching rays of the sun burns and looks like a ball of burnt cow-dung.

11. Tempestuous winds characteristic of the end of the universe, blow violently for a hundred years and the sky is enveloped in dust and appears smoky.

12. Thereupon hosts of clouds of various shades of colours, roaring with violent peals of thunder, pour down heavy showers of rains for one hundred years.

13. Then the universe within the cosmic egg becomes transformed into one single sheet of water. When the cosmic waters have flooded the universe and everything is merged under water, the water absorbs scent—the quality of the earth.

14. When the earth has lost its essential distinguishing quality viz. fragrance, it disintegrates and ceases to exist. The fire then absorbs the property of fluidity from the waters and they being deprived of their fluidity, cease to exist.

15. The winds thereupon swallow up the form or colour which is the characteristic property of fire (Tejas). Then the ākāśa absorbs the property of the wind (viz. touch) and it ceases to exist (as it is dispersed in the sky).

16. The wind enters (and is absorbed) in the ether. Bhūtādi i.e. ego of the Tāmasic type absorbs sound which is the characteristic of the sky which gets dissolved in the Bhūtādi.

17. Dear Parīkṣit ! The rājasa type of ahamkāra absorbs all the sense-organs and Vaikārika i.e. the Sāttvic type of ego does the same in the case of their Presiding deities. The Principle called Mahat (Cosmic intelligence) swallows up the Ahamkāra and the attributes known as Sattva and others absorb the Mahat.

18. The unmanifest Prakṛti, being impelled by the force of the Time-spirit, absorbs the attributes (Sattva, rajas, tamas) and establishes equilibrium in them.

19. Pradhāna i.e. unmanifest Primordial matter is not subject to the states of modifications (such as birth, growth, decay, death) produced by the divisions of time. It is beginning less; it has no end; it is unmanifest, eternal, the cause of all, but not subject to decay.

20. In that stage of Prakṛti, there is no (existence of) speech, mind, modes or attributes of Prakṛti like Sattva, rajas and tamas or principles like mahat (Cosmic intelligence). There is no scope to vital air (Prāṇa) intelligence, sense or their presiding deities. There is no structure or form which can be called "the world."

21. It is a state in which there is no dream, wakefulness or sleep. There is no sky or ether, water, earth, air, fire, or the sun. It resembles to some extent the deep sleep or vacuity itself. But it is beyond the range of thinking or imagination. The Vedas declare that (this unmanifest) state is the original root of the universe.

22. When the potencies of both Puruṣa and the unmanifest (Prakṛti) are impelled by Time and get inevitably and thoroughly absorbed into their substratum, that is known as the Prākṛtika Pralaya (dissolution into Prakṛti or Primordial matter)<sup>1</sup>

23*. Knowledge<sup>2</sup> or consciousness is the substratum of buddhi (reason or intellect), indriyas (the senses-organs) and artha the objects of these senses). It is in the forms of these three that knowledge shines forth. But whatever has a beginning and an end is unreal because of its perceptibility and as such it is undifferentiated from its cause<sup>3</sup>.

24. Light, the eye and colour or form are not different from the principle of Tejas (as they are the modifications of Tejas—light or fire). Similarly, the intellect, the senses and the sense-objects are not separate or distinct from Brahman. But Brahman is quite distinct from them (as Brahman exists even when the triad—the intellect, senses and objects—ceases to exist)<sup>4</sup>.

25. It is said that the state or wakefulness, dream and sleep are the states of buddhi (intellect). The plurality (such

1. VR points out that potencies (Śaktis) are the products or evolutes of Prakṛti. When Prakṛti remains as an undifferentiated and inseparable attribute of Paramātmān, that is the dissolution of Prakṛti.

* From 23rd verse follows the description of the ātyantika Pralaya (everlasting dissolution) which is Mokṣa—final emancipation from Samsāra.

2. VR takes knowledge (Jñāna) as signifying the supreme soul (Jñāna-śabdaḥ Paramātmā-vācī.)

3. VR : Buddhi (reason), indriyas (senses), etc. are like a body and have no independent existence unless Paramātmān abides in them. It is he who shines through them.

VJ's explanation appears to me farfetched; "During this Pralaya the Brahman who alone supports all, shines along with Lakṣmi, liberated souls (Muktas) and he appears refulgent in the form of light and has the excellent beauty that gives delight to all senses.

Behind VJ, there is, however, a tradition of interpretation of the Bh. P. from Madhva, The founder of Dvaitism.

4. Just as it is on the principle—tejas that the three—light (as a product), the eye (the recipient of tejas) and colour the property of Tejas—depend, so the reason, senses and the objects are created by the Lord and depend on him. Hence, they cannot exist apart from God. But he is distinct from these and is termed as jyotiḥ.

as Viśva, Taijasa and Prājña) ascribed to the pure soul is purely Māyā (illusion).

26. Just as clouds sometimes appear and disappear from the sky, this universe which consists of parts and has a beginning and an end appears and disappears on the substratum of Brahman.<sup>1</sup>

27. Of all objects consisting of parts, only parts are said to be real (in the Upaniṣads<sup>2</sup>) as they form the cause, just as threads (of cloth) can be seen (to exist) even if the cloth (is unwoven and hence) not in existence.

28.* Whatever is perceived as a cause or an effect is an illusion as causal relation is (mutually) interdependent. Whatever has a beginning or an end is unreal.

29. The effect called Prapañca (or the Phenomenal universe) though apparent or visible to us, is unexplainable at all apart from (i.e. independently of) the pure Self Pratyagātman). If it were real even to the slightest degree, it would be the same as the intelligent or conscious Self and as such identical with ātman.

30. Satya<sup>3</sup> i.e. ātman (the Self) has no diversity. It is the real existence, one without a second or difference. One who believes in difference is ignorant. The apparent diversity

1. VJ : just as clouds appear and disappear from the sky, and the clouds and sky are different, so is the Brahma which creates and dissolves. The world is different from it.

2. Vācārambhāṇam vikāro nāmadheyam mṛttiketyeva satyam—Chāndogya Up.6.1.4.

* VR : The principle and its modifications are interdependent and denote the same thing in its subtle and gross state. So the distinctness of an effect or product from the general principle and its speciality in modification is nothing but misunderstanding. That which has a beginning and an end (e.g. our bodies) cannot be the Soul (anātmavastu).

VJ : A general principle is the aspect of a thing which remains constant throughout its existence. The aspect that is not so constant is the modification. These two are different, separable aspects. Hence that which has a beginning and an end is not an essential part of the thing.

3. VR : Satya means the individual soul. He quotes Tait. Up. 2.6.1 (tat Sṛṣṭvā tadeva nuprāviśat tad anupraviśya sacca tyaccē' bhavat). A person who thinks that there is difference in the Jivātman of gods, men etc. is ignorant.

VJ : "Satya" means Brahman. It is not subject to differentiation or division (satyasya Brahmano rūpāṇām nānātvam satyam na bhavati).

is due to some condition (upādhi) as between the space enclosed in a pot and the unlimited expanse of the sky (both though one, appear different due to the enclosing condition of a pot), between the sun (in the sky) and its reflections in water or between the vital air or breath inside the body and the air outside the body (in the world over.)

31. Just as gold is denoted by various names according to the form into which it is shaped, so the suprasensuous Lord is called by various names by egotistic persons in the language of the world and in the Vedic parlance.

32. Just as a cloud, created by the sun (by evaporating water with his rays) and exhibited (by the light of the sun), becomes darkness preventing the eye (which is also a part of the sun) from getting the view of the sun, Ego (ahamkāra) which is evolved out of Brahman and is lighted by Brahman works as an obstruction to Jīva or individual self (which is also a part of the Brahman) becomes a bondage preventing it from having a view of the Brahman.

33. When the cloud born of the sun (by the heat of the solar rays) is dispersed, the eye is able to have a view of the sun which is its own form. The same way, when ahamkāra (ego which works) as the limiting condition (and obscures the realization of Brahman) is destroyed by investigation (into the real nature of the ātman (soul), it realizes that it is Brahman itself.

34. When the bondage of the Soul (ātman) consisting of ahamkāra which is an evolute of Māyā and which comes in the way of the realization of the self (ātman) is severed with the sword of spiritual knowledge, such a state of ever-lasting final emancipation is known as the eternal ātyantika) Pralaya.

35*. Some persons, having (deeper) knowledge of the subtle state of things, assert that the creation and dissolution occurs continuously in the case of all beings from god Brahmā downwards, O chastiser of enemies.

36. The continuous sequence of modifications through which changing things such as bodies of beings (a stream of * VJ: God Brahmā and others experience birth and death every day.

VR : Here Pralaya means modifications in the body.

water or the flame of a lamp) which are rapidly being worn away by the inexorable force of the stream of time-pass, are (known as) the eternal causes of the origination and destruction of the bodies.

37. (What can be observed is only very broad stages such as childhood, youth, age). But the continuous successive states (of the body) effected by the Time-spirit which is another form of the Almighty God, and which has no beginning or end, are not distinctly perceptible every moment even as the motion (per minute) of the luminaries (the planets and stars) in their course through the sky, are beyond (our capacity of) observation.

38. Thus the four types of dissolution, viz. constant (nitya), occasional or depending on condition (naimittika), relating to Prakṛti (Prākṛtika) and everlasting or final (ātyantika) have been described to you. Such is the course of Time.

39. O most prominent of Kurus ! In this way, these stories of the sportive activities of Lord Nārāyaṇa, the creator of the universe, the abode of all beings (or the centre of all power and goodness) have been narrated to you briefly. It is beyond the capacity even of the birth-less god Brahmā to narrate them in details and in their entirety (even though he is endowed with the longest span of life of two parārdha years.)

40. If a man is distressed and scorched in the wild fire of various types of griefs and miseries and is desirous of crossing this ocean of samsāra which it is extremely difficult to cross, there is no other boat (lit. raft) other than (the act of) constantly listening to and thus drinking the nectar-like stories of the sportful activities of the glorious supreme person.

41. In ancient days, the immortal sage Nārāyaṇa taught this compilation of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa (through god Brahmā<sup>1</sup>) to Nārada who in his turn taught it to (my father) Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana.

42. It is that worshipful sage Bādarāyaṇa who was pleased to teach me this collection (Purāṇa) describing the glories of the Supreme Lord which has the same sacred status as the Vedas.

1. Vide Supra 2.9. 43-44.

43. O best of Kurus ! Sūta, when requested by sages like Śaunaka and others, will narrate this to sages during the course of a long sacrificial session in the Naimiṣāranya (in future).

CHAPTER FIVE

Śuka's Concluding Precept Concerning Brahman

Śri Śuka said:

1. (This Bhāgavata Mahāpurāṇa inspires fear-less-ness even from death as) herein every now and then is extolled the Almighty Lord Hari, the Soul and controller of the universe, of whose gracious joy (a trait of rajas) was born god Brahmā, the creator of the world and of whose anger was created Rudra, the destroyer of the world (and both are hence subordinate to and dependent on him).

2. O King ! Please do give up this brute-like (foolish) notion (identifying the Soul with one's physical body) that you will die. Unlike (your) body (which did not exist before the moment of its birth and hence shall naturally perish), you i.e. your soul did pre-exist (your physical body), is now in existence and shall never die (irrespective of what happens to your body).

3. You are quite distinct from your body, etc., just as fire (though potentially abiding in fuel) is distinct from the fuel. Hence, on the analogy of seeds and trees, you i.e. your soul (being once a father<sup>1</sup>) shall not take the form of a son, a grandson, etc.

1. ŚR. explains : The quotations from Śrutis e.g. ātma vai putra-nāmāsi, support physical heredity and not a continuity of one's soul—dehād deho jāyate na ātma. Hence in this physical continuity of the race, the soul is not involved.

4. Just as a person sees in his dream that he is beheaded (when factually he is the unaffected party or a witness to the scene of cutting the head of his body in the dream state), so also in a state of wakefulness he sees the death of his body. But as a matter of fact the Soul (ātman) is neither born nor dead.

5. When an earthen pot is broken, the space enclosed within the pot becomes the same as before (the creation of that pot), in the same way when (after self-realization which destroys all Karmas) the body falls off, the individual soul becomes one with Brahman).<sup>1</sup>

6. It is the Māyā that creates the mind<sup>2</sup>. The mind creates these bodies, objects of senses and actions of the soul. Hence it is due to the Māyā that the jīva (individual soul) is involved in transmigration of samsāra.

7. Just as the light (of an oil-lamp) retains its characteristic of giving light so long as the fire (the flame of the lamp) is associated with the wick soaked in oil, supply of oil to the wick, a container—a storage for this oil supply, similarly, Karma is the oil, the mind, the container of the oil, the body, the wick and its contact with fire means relation to the spirit. The body comes into existence and dies through the actions of the guṇas rajas, Sattva and tamas.<sup>3</sup>

8. The soul that is embodied does not cease to exist. For He is self-illuminating, distinct from and beyond gross (physi-

1. VR : Becomes a mukta—an emancipated soul. Viśiṣṭādvaita presumes the continuity of the distinct identity of the soul even in the Mokṣa stage and not its absorption and loss in Paramātman.

2. VJ: Māyā is the unintelligent (jaḍa) matter. So its creation—the mind—is also Jaḍa. The use of the Ātmanepada sṛjate in tanmanah sṛjate māyā, in the text of this verse indicates that it is due to the mind's contact with the intelligent being that activates it and enables it do all these (Sṛjata ityātmanepada-Prayogena cin-miśram mana iti sūcayati).

3. The samsāra continues as long as the contact or influence of guṇas is there and the false presumption of the identity of the body and the soul persists. The samsāra like the lamp may cease to exist but the soul persists in existence despite the non-recurrence of the body.

cal) and subtle, unmanifest (astral) bodies. Like the sky, he is the support (of everything else), eternal, endless, unparalleled and all pervasive.

9. Fully absorbed in the meditation on Vāsudeva and by means of your logical reasoning, do you yourself ponder over the self that is abiding in your body, O great king.

10. Impelled by the imprecation of that Brāhmaṇa, Takṣaka shall not be able to burn you<sup>1</sup> (i. e. your soul). All the causes of death can never burn the supreme Lord who himself is the death of such agents of death.

11-12. "I am the Brahman. I am the Supreme abode. Brahman, the highest goal (to be reached) is I myself." Having realized this and absorbing yourself in the Supreme Self which is beyond the limits or conditions, you will see neither Takṣaka who is biting you at the foot with poisonous fangs (or licking it with his poisonous mouth) nor your body nor the world as being distinct and separate from your own Ātman.

13. Dear Parīkṣit ! All this has been elucidated to you as per enquiries made by you about the sportful activities of Lord Hari, the Soul of the Universe. What more do you wish to hear from me, O king !

CHAPTER SIX

Takṣaka Bites Parīkṣit: Janmejaya's Serpent Sacrifice: Classification of Vedas in Different Branches:

Śūta said:

1. Having heard this exposition from the Sage Śuka, the son of Vyāsa, who had the vision of Lord Hari, the soul abiding

1. VR : You will not feel the snake-bite as the causes of death cannot affect God and you who are absorbed in his contemplation.

VJ : Due to contemplation of God, Parīkṣit would be in the proximity of God.

in all<sup>1</sup> King Parīkṣit, who (while in womb) was protected by Lord Viṣṇu (Kṛṣṇa) approached the lotus-feet of Śuka and bowed down with his head bent and palms folded.

The king Parīkṣit requested:

2. My purpose in life (viz. of gaining spiritual wisdom) has been accomplished. I have been graciously favoured by your worship of merciful heart, as I have been made to listen directly (to the stories etc.) of Lord Hari who is the cause of the world<sup>2</sup> and have been enlightened in the means of attaining to him.

3. I do not consider it a wonder that the grace of those noble persons who have completely devoted their hearts to Acyuta (Kṛṣṇa) should be showered on ignorant beings who have been tormented by miseries.

4. We have heard from you the collection of this (Bhāgavata) Purāṇa in which is extolled and praised Lord Viṣṇu of hallowing renown.

5. Worshipful Sir ! Now I am not afraid of death either from Takṣaka or from other causes. I have entered (i.e. established my mind) in the fearless and supremely blissful Brahman, as guided by you.

6. O Brāhmaṇa sage ! Be pleased to permit me. I shall now control my speech and other senses and concentrate on the supra-sensuous Lord. Entering (i. e. establishing my mind which is rid of all cravings and desires into the Supreme Lord, I shall give up my body.

7. You have graciously shown to me the fearless and the supreme state of the Almighty Lord, the firm insight of the knowledge and realisation of which have completely wiped out my nescience and the effects and impressions caused by it.

Sūta said:

8. The worshipful Śuka, the son of Bādarāyaṇa who was thus addressed and worshipped by the king, took leave of the

1. Or : Who looked upon all as within himself or with equal outlook (ŚR). —

2. Or : Who is eternal with no beginning or end.

king and departed along with other ascetics (who came to listen to the Bhāgavata.)

9. By force of his reason, king Parikṣit also established his mind firmly with his Soul and meditated on the Supreme Brahman remaining breathless and motionless like a tree (trunk or a post.)

10. On the bank of the Gaṅgā, facing to the north and seated on a seat of Kuśa grass the end of which pointed to the east, the great Yogin who was completely devoid of attachment and all whose doubts had been resolved, was completely merged in the Brahman.

11. O Brāhmaṇas ! when the king became absorbed in Brahman, it was unnecessary and superfluous to kill him by snake-bite. In the meanwhile Takṣaka was directed by the revengeful and indignant son of Brāhmaṇa (sage Śamika). While Takṣaka was going with the intention of killing the King, on the way he met (the Brāhmaṇa) Kaśyapa (who knew how to counteract poison).

12. With payment of money, he gratified the Brāhmaṇa who knew how to cure (all types of) poison<sup>1</sup> and made him go back. The serpent who was capable of assuming any form at will, disguised himself as a Brāhmaṇa<sup>2</sup> and bit the King.

13. Instantly the body of the royal sage who had become merged in Brahman was reduced to ashes by the serpent poison, while all embodied beings stood as mere witnesses.

14. There arose a loud hue and cry all over the earth, the sky and in all directions. For all gods, asuras, men, etc. became astonished at the event.

15. (But it was also a joyous occasion as King Parikṣit was absorbed in the Brahman). Drums were sounded in the heavens; Gandharvas and Apsaras (celestial musicians and dancers) sang. Gods, expressing their approbation, sent down showers of flowers.

1. MBH : Ādi. 42.36-43 describes how Kāśyapa showed Takṣaka how he resuscitated the tree burnt to ashes by Takṣakabite.

2. The MBH Ādi. 43. 22-36 makes him mixed up as a worm in the fruits, presented to the King by Nāga sages.

16. Hearing that his father had been assassinated by Takṣaka, Janmejaya flared up with wrath. With the help of Brāhmaṇa priests, he started a sacrificial session in which he offered Nāgas as oblations into the fire, in the prescribed manner.

17. Seeing that even big serpents were being burnt in the raging fire-blaze of the serpent-sacrifice, Takṣaka became terror-stricken and sought the protection of Indra.

18. Not seeing Takṣaka (invoked and obliterated) in the sacred fire kindled for the sacrifice, the king Janmejaya, the son of Parīkṣit, enquired why Takṣaka, the vilest of serpents, was not invoked as oblation to the fire.

19. "O King of kings ! It is Indra who is protecting Takṣaka as he has sought asylum with him. He has been protected and held back by Indra. Hence the serpent does not fall into the sacrificial fire."

20. Hearing that explanation, the highly intelligent son of Parīkṣit asked the officiating priests, "Why is not Takṣaka along with Indra invoked and made to fall into the fire (by you) O Brāhmaṇas ?"

21. Hearing that request of Janmejaya) the Brāhmaṇas invoked Takṣaka along with Indra in that sacrifice thus : "O Takṣaka ! Instantly fall into this (sacrificial) fire along with Indra, the leader of Maruts.<sup>1</sup>

22. In this way, due to the (superior) force in the harsh invocation of the Brāhmaṇas, Indra, along with his aerial car and Takṣaka, was dislodged from his position and became bewildered (in mind).

23. Observing that Indra, along with his aerial car and Takṣaka, was crashing down from the sky, Bṛhaspati of the Angiras gotra (clan) (strongly protested and) remonstrated with the king.<sup>2</sup>

24. "O King of men ! This king of serpents cannot be killed by you, as nectar has been imbibed by him and he is hence immune from old age and death.

1. Who is accompanied by Marut (wind)—gods—VR. VJ.

2. As per MBH, Ādi. chs. 56-58 it is Āstika, the Yāyāvara who made Janmejaya to stop the sacrifice.

25. (If you still insist on burning him as he is the murderer of your father please consider that Life and death of a being and his (consequent) position in the other world—all is determined by his own actions (Karma). Hence, O King, (it is the Karma—the result of one's action and) no other person can be held responsible as the cause of happiness or misery of any other person.

26. When a being meets death through the agency of a serpent, a thief, fire, lightning, starvation, thirst, disease and such other causes, the victim is experiencing the fruit of his own Karma that is in the process of fruition.

27. Therefore, let this malevolently motivated sacrificial session involving violence to life be stopped, as serpents, in spite of their innocence, have been burnt O King ! (I however do not blame you for what you have done so far) It is the fruit of one's part action that is experienced by people.

Sūta said:

28. Thus appealed, the king respected the words of the great sage and said, "Let it be done so." He desisted from that serpent sacrifice and worshipped Bṛhaspati.

29. Such is this notable great deluding potency (Māyā) of Lord Viṣṇu. It is both incomprehensible and insuperable. It is due to the deluding force of this Māyā that beings, though rays or aṁśas of Viṣṇu succumb to passions (such as anger, etc.) which are the products of guṇas (like rajas and tamas) and do wrong to other fellow-beings.

30.* (Māyā is superable if you resort to Lord Viṣṇu). The notion such as 'This man is a hypocrite' which exists in the mind is Māyā. But it does not figure boldly or openly in the frequent discussions held by the exponents of the self in their investigations about the self. (It is shown to exist somehow like one in a scared state of mind and does not function as a deluding potency). With relation to God there is no scope for various discussions or disputations which are based on Māyā as he is above that. Nor can the mind which is of the nature of creating ideations and doubts function in respect of God.

*VJ. is more lucid :

When persons who, being experts in investigating into Upaniṣads, repeatedly carry on their enquiry or discussion about Paramātmā, Māyā which has the capacity of deluding beings, does not wield any influence over Hari, though it may remain incomprehensible to others. Brahman cannot be comprehended even by the mind which is 'unstable' due to its apprehensions and doubts. Here the deities presiding over the mind or speech are implied and not the physical organ. Even these deities cannot comprehend paramātmā.

31. In relation to Him, no scope is there for the Jīva with its adjunct ahamkāra as its component and with Karma (action), materials bringing about Karma or its instruments and the fruit to be attained through the above two. He is above and unrelated to opposition or interruption (and hence does not oppose anybody or can be opposed by anybody). That being the nature of the self, the contemplative sage should discard these waves i.e. aberrations of ahamkāra and remain in the blissful state of ātman.

32. Persons who after due examination (of the true nature of things) desire to renounce everything that is not Ātman (using the words 'not that', 'not that') declare that the essential supreme nature of Viṣṇu is as (described) above. They have given up the false notion of (the identification of the body and soul called here as) 'I-ness' and 'mine-ness' with reference to their body and belongings. With full control over their body, senses and mind they embrace the essential nature of Viṣṇu in their heart and realize the Ātman by their power of meditation.

33. Only they can attain to the supreme nature of Viṣṇu, who are not touched by the evil notion of 'I' and 'mine' with reference to their body and house.

34. One should tolerate disparaging remarks and harsh words; he should not show disrespect to anybody; nor should he cherish enmity to any one for the sake of this (physical) body (which is to be cast off one day).

35. I bow to the worshipful and glorious Kṛṣṇa-Dvaipāyana Vyāsa<sup>1</sup> whose intelligence easily grasps everything (lit. is unobstructible). It is by meditating upon his feet that I learnt this compilation of Srīmad Bhāgavata.

1. Glorious Lord Kṛṣṇa—VJ.

Śaunaka said :

36. Be pleased to tell us into how many branches (or schools) were the Vedas divided by Paila and others (viz. Vaiśampāyana, Jaimini, Sumantu and Śuka) great-souled teachers of the Vedas, the disciples of Vyāsa !

Śūta said :

37. While god Brahmā, the occupant of the highest position in the creation, was meditating with well-composed mind, from the space (the sky-like vacuum) in his heart arose a sound. The same sound is even perceptible when the function of the sense of hearing is closed.

38. By concentrating on that sound (nāda)<sup>1</sup> O sage, yogins wipe out all the impurities of the mind caused by the Adhibhūta, the Adhyātma and the Adhidaiva<sup>2</sup> and attain to Liberation from saṁsāra (lit. the state from which there is no return).

39. From that nāda (sound) arose the sacred syllable Om which consists of three mātrās (viz. a, u, m,) the source of which is unmanifest<sup>3</sup> and shines (i.e. becomes manifest in the heart) by itself. That Om is the special index of the glorious Brahman, the Supreme Soul.

40. He (god Brahmā) hears the unmanifest syllable OM even when the auditory sense has ceased to work (as when the ears are closed) and whose cognition remains unaffected even when all senses become function-less<sup>4</sup>. (as in Samādhi or in deep sleep). It is that sacred syllable OM which, evolving from Paramātman, becomes manifest (audible) in the cavity of the heart and produces the great speech called the Vedas.

1. Concentration on the Nāda (sound) is a special Type of Yoga.

2. These terms are variously interpreted : Thus dravya or adhi-bhūta is taken as pertaining to the bhūtas or elements the body; Kriyā or adhyātma as organs of actions (VJ) but karma—merit as well as sin (VR); Kāraka or adhidaiva as sense of perception' (VJ) Sense-organs (VR).

3. aprabhava (i) The source of which is too subtle to be understood by those who are not adept in Yoga (VR).

(ii) Whose source is the unmanifest Hari (VJ).

4. This is not possible in the case of Jīva who depends on sense-organs (ŚR).

41*. It (Pranava or OM) directly and comprehensively expresses the Supreme Soul (Paramātman), the Brahman itself which is its source. It is the eternal seed of all the Mantras, Vedas and Upaniṣads.

42. It i.e. OM is constituted of three sounds: A and others viz. U and M, O most prominent member of the Bhṛgu clan. These sounds—A, U and M severally contain (the seed of) the triads of entities, viz. guṇas (modes of prakṛti, viz. sattva, rajas and tamas), names (the Vedas—R̥g, Sāman and Yajus), substances<sup>1</sup> (the three spheres or worlds known as bhūh—the earth, bhuvaḥ—the sky and the aerial region svaḥ—the heaven and states of consciousness (wakefulness, dream and deep sleep)).

43. Out of the (above) three syllables, the glorious Lotus-born god Brahmā evolved the alphabets consisting of semi-vowels (y, v, r, l), aspirants (ś, ṣ, s, h), vowels, consonants (viz. gutturals, palatals, cerebrals, dentals, and labials) short, long and prolated accents or sound measures.)

44. With the help of these sounds (letters of the alphabet) Brahmā, through his four mouths, gave expression to four Vedas together with the vyāhṛtis (bhūh, bhuvaḥ, svaḥ) and the sacred syllable OM. He intended to lay down the duties of the priests, viz., hotā, adhvaryu, udgātā and Brahmā officiating at sacrifice.

45. He taught the Vedas to his sons (like Marīci and others) who were Brāhmaṇa sages and made them experts in the Vedic pronunciation and intonation. They became the promulgators of dharma and taught the same, in their turn, to their sons.

*Both VR and VJ use the adjectives in this verse as qualifying the Brahman e.g. the Brahman who is the most powerful in its own essential glory. VJ states that previously OM is called 'a significant index (liṅga) of the Brahman, here it is described as its comprehensive (udcaka) expression and the seed of Mantras and Vedas which when pronounced and articulated properly have the potency to give the fruit of all Mantras : acchinnatvenoccārya-māṇaṁ sarva-mantrādināṁ japtānāṁ phala-dāna-sāmarthyam janayati /

1. arīhaḥ. VR, as a Viśiṣṭādvaitin, proposes the following triad :

(i) Jīvātman deserves to be a part and parcel of Paramātman. (ii) He depends for shelter on Paramātman and is (iii) fit to be enjoyed by him.

46. During the course of the four Yugas those Vedas were handed down from generation to generation by their disciples who were strict in the observance of Vows. These Vedas were rearranged by great sages at the beginning of the Dvāpara age<sup>1</sup>.

47. Observing that men are having decreasing span of life growing less and less energetic and becoming poorer in intellectual capacity, the Brāhmaṇa sages, as directed by Lord Viṣṇu, enthroned in their heart, re-arranged the Vedas.

48. Even in this (Vaivasvata Manvantara also, O sage, the glorious Lord, the Protector of the world was prayed by the rulers of various spheres like god Brahmā, Rudra and others to protect the path of righteousness.

49. (Responding favourably to their prayers) the Almighty Lord descended as the son of Parāśara and Satyavatī, out of a ray (particle) of Sattva which is but a part of the Māyā. He divided the Veda into four parts, O fortunate sage !

50. Just as (out of a heap of mixed up precious stones) precious stones of the same kind are assorted and kept in separate heaps, he (Vyāsa) selected and classified the Vedic Mantras as belonging to the category of the Ṛg, Atharvan, Yajus, and Sāman and thus compiled four Samhitās or collections out of those (formerly mixed up) Mantras.

51. The vastly intelligent Vyāsa summoned four of his pupils and entrusted to each of them one of the Samhitās, O Śaunaka.

52. As the tradition goes, he taught the first compilation called Bahvrca<sup>2</sup> or the Ṛgveda to Paila and to Vaiśampāyana, the compilation called Yajurveda which (being a collection of prose texts to be recited at the sacrifice) is also called Nigada.

53. He taught the compilation of Sāma-Veda or the

1. ŚR corrects this statement by pointing out that it was at the end of the Dvāpara age, at the time of King Śantanu, that Vyāsa re-arranged the Vedas.

2. Bahvrca—so called as it consists of the biggest number of Mantras.

Chandoga samhitā (compilation of mantras to be sung according to metre in which they are composed) to Jaimini. And the compilation of Atharvāṅgirasi or the Atharva Veda to his disciple named Sumantu.

54-56. (Dividing the Rgveda into two branches) the sage Paila taught that Samhitā to Indra-pramiti and Bāṣkala. Bāṣkala on his part divided the Samhitā taught to him in four branches and taught one each respectively to (his pupils) Bodhya, Yājñavalkya, Parāśara and Agnimitra, O descendant of Bhṛgu (i.e. Śaunaka). Indrapramiti, a man of controlled mind, taught his Samhitā to the learned sage Māṇḍūkeya (who was his son). Māṇḍūkeya's disciple was Devamitra who taught it to Saubhari and others.

57. Śākalya was Māṇḍūkeya's son. He divided his Samhitā into five branches and imparted the knowledge of one each to his pupils, Vātsya, Mudgala, Śālīya, Gokhalya, and Śiśira.

58. The sage Jātūkarnya was another disciple of Śākalya. He (divided his Samhitā into three parts) taught his Samhitā together with its Nirukta (etymological explanation of Vedic words) to his (four) pupils, Balāka, Paija, Vaitāla and Viraja.

59. Bāṣkala's son, Bāskali, carved out of all the above mentioned branches a new Samhitā called Vālakhilya Samhitā which was mastered and preserved by (his disciples) Bālāyani, Bhajya and Kāsāra.

60. These compilations (branches) of the Bahvrca or the Rgveda were learnt and preserved by these Brāhmaṇa sages. He who listens to the classification of the Vedas is absolved of all sins. (Now follows the account of the Taittiriya Samhitā of the Yajurveda).

61. It is traditionally reported that Vaiśampāyana had pupils called Carakādhvaryus.<sup>1</sup> For the sake of their preceptor, they performed a penance in expiation of the sin of Brahmahatyā (killing a Brāhmaṇa).

1. The term is variously explained : Pupils called

(i) Carakas and Adhvaryus

(ii) Carakas who became Adhvaryus (experts in the Yajurveda)

Caraka (1) One who observed a vow

(2) Pilgrims to places of holy water (VJ)

Adhvaryus—experts in conducting sacrifices. (VJ).

62. One of his disciples, Yājñavalkya, remarked (to Vaiśampāyana). “O worshipful Sir, what (insignificant) amount of reward (in the form of expiation of the sin) can be gained through the poor performance of penance by these weaklings? I alone can undergo such austere penance as will be extremely difficult for others to perform (and will alone absolve you of the sin of Brahma-hatyā).”

63. When (boastfully) addressed thus, the preceptor (Vaiśampāyana) got offended. He (peremptorily) ordered; “Get out. Enough of a pupil like you who contemptuously speak of Brāhmaṇa sages. Give up at once whatever you have learnt from me.”

64. Thereupon, the son of Devarāta (Yājñavalkya) on his part immediately vomitted out the collection of Yajurveda passages (that he learnt from his preceptor) and left the place. And the sages saw the collection of the Yajurveda texts.

65. (At that sight) the sages were so enamoured of it (and greedily wanted to master as much of it as they could. But acceptance of vomition being disgraceful to Brāhmaṇas) they assumed the form of Tittira birds (francoline Partridges) and collected it. Hence the beautiful branches of the Yajurveda came to be known as Taittirīyas. (The origin of the branches called Kāṇva, Mādhyandina of the white Yajurveda is now explained).

66. Thereupon, in search of Śruti portions not known even to his preceptor, Yājñavalkya devoutly worshipped and prayed the sun-god, the Master of Vedas<sup>1</sup> as follows:

Yājñavalkya implored:

67. Salutations to the glorious sun-god denoted by the syllable OM<sup>2</sup>—The sun-god who, though one, abides in

1. ŚR's quotation :

*Rgbhiḥ pūrvāhṇe divi-deva tyate, Yajurvede tiṣṭhati, madhye ahnaḥ
Sāma-vedenāstamaye mahīyate
Vedair aśūnyas tribhireti sūryaḥ //*

2. VJ : Salutations to the Supreme Lord denoted by the syllable Om, the Brahman itself. You are endowed with six excellent attributes which show your supreme nature as applied to sages like Vasiṣṭha). You are eternal preceding all creation (āditya).

the form of ātman, in the whole of the universe, enthroned in the hearts of four categories of beings (viz. oviparous, viviparous, Sweat-born, sprouted from the earth i.e. the plants, etc.) beginning from god Brahmā down to a clump of grass but who (though inside like a jīva) is not circumscribed by any condition, who like the limitless sky envelops the universe from the out-side as well in the form of Time. The almighty God maintains, all alone, the life and progress of the world by evaporating waters (during the summer) and releasing them back (as rain-showers during the rainy season) throughout years constituted of parts of time such as a moment, an instant, an eye-wink, etc. (This explains the Vareṇyatva stated in the first foot of the Gāyatri-mantra).

68. O Prominent god ! The creator of the world ! We devoutly and properly as per Vedic procedure) meditate upon that celebrated orb of yours which is shining over these. O god of blazing splendour ! You burn down all the sins and (the resultant) miseries as well as their seed (ignorance) in the case of those who worship (and contemplate upon) you as per prescriptions laid down in the Vedas. We worship you thrice a day (in the morning, the mid-day and the evening) as per rules laid down in the Vedas. (This explains the second foot of the Gāyatri Mantra).

69. You of your own accord become the soul, the inner controller of the multitudes of mobile and immobile beings in this world, which depend on you for their very existence and direct their minds, sense-organs, vital breaths which are distinct from the soul and hence inert matter. (This explains the third foot of the Gāyatrī).

70. Beholding that this world is swallowed up by an extremely horrendous boaconstrictor (of terrible jaws) called 'darkness' and is bereft of consciousness as if it is dead, you, being extremely tender-hearted, resuscitated it by your compassionate glance and directed it to attend to the course of performing their religious duties thrice every day which ultimately lead to the summum bonum and you go about like the sovereign of the world instilling terror in the hearts of the wicked.

71. "On all sides, at every stage, you are worshipped by the guardian deities of the cardinal points with presents in their lotus-bud-like joined palms.

72. Hence, as I am desirous of learning those texts of the Yajurveda which are fresh (i.e. not properly known to others), I approach and worship your lotus-feet which are bowed down by (Indra and other) rulers of the three worlds." Thus prayed Yajñavalkya.

Sūta said:

73. Being thus extolled and pleased thereby, the glorious Lord Hari i.e. the sun-god, assumed the form of a horse and out of grace, imparted to that sage the knowledge of those portions of the Yajurveda which were not stale (i.e. known to others).

74. That (spiritually) powerful sage classified hundreds of those mantras of the Yajurveda into fifteen branches, known as Vājasanis (They were called Vājasani as they were delivered very rapidly from the hair of his mane by the sun god in the form of a horse) Kāṇva, Mādhyandina and other sages learnt those branches.

(Now begins the topic of Sāma-veda)

75. Jaimini, the Chanter of the Sāma-Veda had a son called Sumantu who was (already) a sage. He had a son called Sunvan. To each of them, Jaimini taught a separate branch of the (Sāma-Veda) saṁhitā.

76. Jaimini had another disciple called Sukarmā who was a Brāhmaṇa of vast intellectual capacity. He classified the compilation of Sāman hymns into one thousand branches (lit. he made the tree of the Sāmaveda grow into a thousand branches).

77. Hiraṇya-nābha of Kosala (country) and Pauṣyañji—both disciples of Sukarman accepted (i.e. learnt) the entire Sāmaveda. So did another disciple Āvantya (a resident of Avanti) who was the most prominent knower of Brahma (Veda).

78. Pauṣyañji and Āvantya as well, each had five hundred disciples. They say that Pauṣyañji, Āvantya as well as Hiraṇya-nābha<sup>1</sup> had five hundred disciples who learnt as many branches of Sāma. They hailed from the northern part of the country and hence are called 'Northerners' though some call them "easterners".

1. ŚR quotes Viṣṇu P. 3.6.4. b and 5 to support this.

79. Laugākṣi, Māṅgali, Kulya, Kuśīda and Kukṣi—the (other) pupils of Pauṣyañji accepted (learnt) hundred compilations (Branches) of Sāmaveda each.

80. Kṛta, the disciple of Hiraṇyanābha taught twenty-four compilations (of Sāma hymns) to his pupils and Āvantya, a man of self-control, taught the remaining collections to his students.

CHAPTER SEVEN

The Branches of the Atharva Veda : Characteristics of the Purāṇas<sup>1</sup>

Sūta said :

1. Sumantu was well versed in the Atharva Veda. He taught his collection (of Atharva hymns) to his disciple Kaban-dha<sup>2</sup>) who in his turn taught it to Pathya and Vedadarśa.

2. The disciples of Vedadarśa were Śauklāyani, Brahmbali, Modoṣa and Pippalāyani. (Vedadarśa divided the Samhita in four parts and taught them). Listen to the (names of) disciples of Pathya, O Brāhmaṇa (Śaunaka). Kumuda, Śunaka, and Jājali, the expert knower of the Atharva-Veda (were the pupils of Pathya who divided the Samhitā in three parts and taught them).

3. Śunaka (born in the family of Aṅgiras) had two disciples—Babhru as well as Saindhavāyana. They studied the two collections (of the Atharva) their disciples—Sāvarṇya and others also (studied the same in their turn).

4. Nakṣatra-Kalpa, Śānti-Kalpa<sup>3</sup>, Kaśyapa, Aṅgiras and

1. This chapter is closely similar to VP 3.6

2. Vide VP. 3.6.9.

3. As VP. 3.6.13-14 states Nakṣatra-Kalpa, Śānti-Kalpa Veda-Kalpa, Samhitā-Kalpa and Aṅgirasa Kalpa are the collection of Atharvan hymns and others were the teachers of the Atharva Veda. O Śaunaka, now listen to the names of the teachers of the Purāṇic lore.

5. Traiyyāruṇi, Kāśyapa, Sāvarṇi, Akṛtavraṇa, Vaiśampāyana and Hārīta—these six are traditionally noted as the teachers of the Purāṇas.

6. These teachers learnt one Purāṇa collection each, by oral tradition, from my father (Romaharṣaṇa) who was a pupil of Vyāsa. While I, as a disciple of each of them, learnt them all.

7. I, Kāśyapa, Sāvarṇi and Paraśurāma's disciple Akṛtavraṇa—We four learnt the original four collections of Purāṇa from Vyāsa's disciple.

8. Now listen with intelligent attention the characteristics of Purāṇas as described by Brāhmaṇa sages in conformity to Vedas and Śāstras.

9-10. Those who are experts in Purāṇic lore declare that a Purāṇa is distinguished by the following ten characteristics<sup>1</sup> (or topics dealt with) : (1) Subtle creation (Sarga), (2) gross creation (Visarga), (3) Sustenance (Vṛtti), (4) Protection of the universe (Rakṣā), (5) Cause or the lust for Karmas (Hetu), (6) the periods of Manu (Antara i. e. Manvantara), (7) Dynasties of Kings (Vamśa), (8) Deeds of the Lord and dynastic kings (Vamśānucarita), (9) Physical annihilation (Samsthā) (10) The Last support or ultimate reality (Apāśraya). O Brāhmaṇa (Śaunaka), some say that Purāṇas have five characteristics<sup>2</sup> which distinguishes between great and small Purāṇas.<sup>3</sup>

11. Sarga ( Subtle creation ) is ( i. e. consists of topics like ) the evolution of Mahat (the principle of cosmic Intelli-sages like Kāśyapa, Aṅgiras preserved them. These Kalpas treat of rituals connected with the worship of Nakṣatras, Śāntikarma (propitiatory rituals) etc. Here the names of the Samhitās stand for the authors (ŚR).

1. Bh. P. Supra 2.10.3-7 has given these ten characteristics with some different nomenclature. For the discussion of these topics vide Vol. I. Introduction, pp. XVIII-XXXIV.

2. ŚR enumerates them as follows : Sarga, Pratisarga, Vamśa, manvantara and Vamśānucarita.

3. As the Intro. mentioned in the above note shows these ten characteristics can be epitomised into five. Hence these need not be regarded as a differentia between a Mahā Purāṇa and Upa-Purāṇa.

gence) from the agitation of and disturbance in the balance of equilibrium of the three guṇas of the Unmanifest Prakṛti—the Primordial Matter) leading to the evolution of three-fold Ahaṁkāra ( of the Vaikārika or Sāttvika, Rājasa and Tāmasa types, according to the dominance of the particular guṇa) the evolutes of which are subtle elements (bhūtas), the sense-organs and their objects (viz. gross elements and the deities presiding over the sense-organs).

12. Visarga ( gross creation ) is the creation of the gross mobile and immobile nature resulting from the collective effects evolved out of Mahat and other principles charged with the potency of creation by the Supreme Person and dominated by the influence of previous Karmas (of the Jīvas) evolving in the manner of the continuation of a seed from a seed.

13. The immobile creation ( e. g. food-grains, fruits, roots) and some products of mobile creation also form the sustenance of the mobile creation. And in the case of human beings, the sustenance is determined by their nature, desire and scriptural injunctions<sup>1</sup> (the earth is the real support or sustenance of mobile creatures as described in the fifth Skandha.

14. Rakṣā or Protection of the universe consists of the incarnations and the sportive acts (exploits, etc.) of Lord Viṣṇu, from age to age appearing among sub-human beings (e. g. the Boar incarnation), human beings (e. g. Paraśurāma, Rāma) sages (e. g. Kapila) and among gods, and the extermination of the haters of the three Vedas (e. g. demons).

15. Manvantara (Manu-period) is the period presided over by the particular Manu (e. g. Vaivasvata Manu at present), the set of gods, the sons of Manu, Indra, seven sages and the incarnations of Hari. Thus a Manvantara is characterized by the above six special features.

16. Vamśa (race) is the line or race of pure, blue-blooded kings born of god Brahmā and continued throughout the three divisions of time (viz. the past, present and future). Varṇānu-carita is the history of these kings, and of their descendants.

1. VJ. The sustenance is determined according to the will of men (e.g. fruits, grain, etc.) and to the prescriptions laid down in the Śāstras (e.g. caru Puroḍāśa).

17. The destruction of the universe created by Māyā<sup>1</sup> is of four types (1) Occasional or brought about by a particular cause, (2) Prākṛtika (of the Prakṛti), (3) Constant and (4) Absolute. This dissolution is called Samsthā by the sages.

18.* The Hetu (cause), the motive power or cause of the universe is the Jīva (individual soul). He is the doer of actions under the influence of Nescience or ignorance. From the point of those who emphasize his conscious or spiritual aspect, he is the enjoyer of the fruits of the balance of his Karmas, while from that of those who stress the Upādhi (conditioned existence) aspect, he is unmanifest i. e. without name and form before the creation.

19-20.** Apātraya (The last support or ultimate reality) is Brahman. It is present as a witness to what is effected by Māyā, as in the three states of Jīva (viz. Viśva, Taijasa and Prājña) in wakefulness, dreaming and dreamless-deep-sleep and is also quite different or distinct from them as in Samādhi. Just as the basic matter (e. g. clay) is both related to and unrelated to its products (clay is found in all things made of clay and

1. The dissolution brought about by the Māyā.

*VR Through his ignorance Jīva commits acts both of merits and sins. It is for enjoying the fruits of those Karmas that the world is there. Thus he becomes the cause of the creation. Some opine that Jīva has always a balance of Karmas to be enjoyed (bhukta-phala-karmāvaśeṣaḥ) and is full of desire to enjoy, while others say that before creation he had no name or form but possessed the impressions of Karmas (Vāsanā).

VJ Interprets anuśāyin as 'one who enters into Paramātmān at the time of deluge and sleeps and avyākṛta is disinterested (?) or immutable (nirvikāra) like the sky. The world is created for the Jīvas to experience pleasure or pain as per their Karmas. Hence he is the cause of creation.

**VR : Brahman is present in all the products of Prakṛti and the states of Jīva but is not affected by it essentially. Brahman is unconnected.

VJ : Viṣṇu is the only support (Apātraya) and none else. He is present in all states of Jīva but is not affected by them. He exists before, during and after these states (such as wakefulness and others). Brahman is both connected and unconnected with all states and substances. And hence their support. It, being without a second, is inferrable by invariable concomitance (anvaya) or the reverse of it (Vyatireka).

still it exists apart from them) ; or just as Sat (real existence) forms the substratum of the name and form, Brahman is related to all the (nine) stages<sup>1</sup> of living beings since their inception to death (as the substratum) and is distinct from them. (The Apāśraya is the highest goal of these characteristics of Purāṇas).

21. When the mind transcends the (above-mentioned) three states (of Ĵiva) either of its own accord (as in the case of sages like Vāmadeva who realized that this creation is Māyā and Brahman is the only reality)—or by the practice of Yoga (as with Kapila's mother Devahūti), then a person realizes Ātman (the self) (ceases to have any Vāsanās) and desists from worldly activities.

22. Sages who are well versed in ancient lore declare that eighteen Purāṇas whether big or small are distinguished by the ten characteristics (described above).

23-24. The names of the eighteen Purāṇas are : (1) Brahma, (2) Padma, (3) Viṣṇu, (4) Śiva, (5) Liṅga, (6) Garuḍa, (7) Nārada, (8) Bhāgavata, (9) Agni, (10) Skanda, (11) Bhaviṣya, (12) Brahmavaivarta, (13) Mārkaṇḍeya (14) Vāmana (15) Varāha, (16) Matsya (17) Kūrma and (18) Brahmāṇḍa.

25. O Brāhmaṇa sage (Śaunaka) : Thus has been related ( to you ) the account of the classification of Vedas into different branches by the sage ( Vyāsa ) and his disciples and pupils of those disciples. It (listening to this account) enhances the glory of Brahman (of the listeners, if devoutly and attentively heard.)

1. They are as follows : Entry into the womb (as a seed) gestation, birth, infancy (upto the age of five), boyhood (upto sixteen), youth (upto fortyfive), middle age (upto sixty), old age and death—vide Supra 11 22.46.

CHAPTER EIGHTMārkaṇḍeya's Penance and Praise of Lord Nārāyaṇa*

Śaunaka said:

1. O Sūta ! May you live long. O virtuous one ! You are the proper guide to men who are wandering in the endless darkness (of Samsāra) as you show them the way out of it. You are the most eminent speaker. Be pleased to tell us one thing which we earnestly desire to know.

2. People say that the son of Mṛkaṇḍa, the sage (Mārkaṇḍeya) is blessed with a very long life and that he remained alive even when the deluge indicating the end of the Kalpa submerged (lit. swallowed up) the whole of this world.

3. (As per tradition) it was in this very Kalpa that the prominent descendant of Bhṛgu was born in our very family. And as far as we know, no deluge or destruction of all beings has taken place to this day.

It is further reported that while he was drifting along on the sea of cosmic waters, he saw the Supreme Person in the form of an extraordinary babe lying on a banyan leaf (with a shallow cavity).

4-5. This (the possibility of the above tradition) is a matter of grave doubt to us. Hence, we have got curiosity (about its veracity) O Sūta. O Yogin, you are respected as an authority on Purāṇas. Be pleased to clarify (and resolve) the above doubt.

Sūta said:

6. O great sage, the enquiry made by you is such as will dispel the misapprehension (in the minds) of the people in general; for while replying to your query the story of Lord Nārāyaṇa will have to be told and that will wash off the sins of the Kali age.

7. Having received consecration at the hands of his father by the investiture of the sacred thread (as per Śāstric injunctions), Mārkaṇḍeya in due course, studied the Vedas as prescribed in religious scriptures and in due course, came to possess (the spiritual power, acquired by) penance and (mastery over) the Vedic Lore.

8. He observed the great vow of celibacy for life, was quiescent (as he brought passions under his control). He wore matted hair (on his head), bark garments, the sacred thread and the girdle of Kuśa grass. He carried a water jar of gourd and a staff in his hands.

9. He wore a deer skin and had a rosary of Rudrākṣa beads and Kuśa grass. For the enhancement of his disciplined life and merits, he worshipped Hari present in the (sacrificial) fire, the sun, his preceptor, Brāhmaṇas and within himself both in the morning and in the evening.

10. He brought food received as alms, both morning and in the evening, and offered it to his preceptor silently. If permitted by his preceptor, he partook of the food once (in a day) and observed fast if no permission was given (due to the arrival of an unexpected guest, etc.)

11. In this way, while absorbed in the performance of penance and Vedic studies, he engaged himself in worshipping Lord Hari for millions of years and conquered death which is extremely difficult to overcome.

12. By this (conquest over death) god Brahmā, Bhṛgu, god Śiva, Dakṣa and other sons of god Brahmā (such as Nārada and men, gods, manes and all other beings (in the world) marvelled greatly (at his wonderful achievement).

13. Possessed of austere penance, deep Vedic studies and self-control, he observed the great vow of life-long celibacy. All the distracting passions in his heart were destroyed. With his mind drawn within, that Yogin meditated upon the Supra-sensuous Lord Hari.

14. Even as the Yogin was engaged in concentrating his mind through the great Yoga on the Supreme person, a long period of time extending over six Manvantaras had passed away.

15. It is said that when Indra came to know of this (performance of penance) in the present seventh Manvantara, he became alarmed at it and began to create interruptions in it, O Brāhmaṇa (Śaunaka).

16. (with a view to interrupting his penance and precipitating his own fall) he deputed to the sage, divine musicians, celestial dancing girls, Cupid (god of Love), the presiding deities of the spring season and the gentle breeze from the Malaya mountain wafting (love-exciting) fragrance as well as greed and pride, the sons (or the products) of rajas.

17. All of them went to the northern slopes of the Himālayas where the river Puṣpabhadṛā flows and to the slab of stone called Citra, O Lord (Śaunaka).

18. The premises of that holy hermitage were adorned with sacred trees (like Aśvattha) and creepers, densely occupied with families of holy Brāhmaṇa sages and were full of pools of holy crystal-clear water.

19. It was resonant with the melodious humming of intoxicated bees and loud with the cooing of joyous cuckoos. It was full of the vivacious movements of ecstatic dancing of the peacocks and of the flights of various birds in joy (displaying their delight).

20. Bearing with it the cool spray of mountain cascades and embraced by fragrant flowers (and hence wafting their sweet scent), the (southern Malaya) wind entered and blew gently exciting the passion of love (in the hearts of men).

21. The spring season manifested itself with the rising moon as the face of the night (i. e. evenings beautiful with the rising moon), with rows of tender leaves and branches of flowers and clusters of trees entwined with creepers (as if in close embrace).

22. Followed by the celestial singers (Gandharvas) with companies of artistes experts in vocal and instrumental music, and accompanied with a troupe of divine damsels, the god of love appeared with a bow and arrows.

23. Those servants of Indra saw the sage sitting steadfast with his eyes closed after offering oblations to the sacrificial fire, looking formidable (and hence unassailable) like fire in the human form.

24. The celestial damsels danced before him and the singers began to sing and the players of instrumental music played upon the Mṛdaṅga, lute, Paṇavakas and horns.

25. While the spring season (i.e. its presiding deity) and son of rajas (Greed—were trying to agitate his mind, Kāma (the god of love) set his missile of five-pointed shaft<sup>1</sup> to his bow.

26-27. While Puñjika-sthalī (a celestial damsel in her role of a temptress was plying with balls (in the presence of the sage), her slim waist was as if afflicted (and hence unstable) under the weight of her full breasts, wreaths of flowers were dropping from her hair. Her eyes were (as if) wandering (i.e. she was constantly looking) this way or that way. While she was running after the balls the wind blew away her fine garment (sāri) as the zone (which was fastened round it) got snapped (and slipped).

28. Feeling confident that the sage is now (as good as) subdued, Smara (the god of love) discharged that shaft, but like all the endeavours put forth by an unfortunate person, his attempt (against the sage) proved futile.

29. Thus while committing that offence against the sage, they were being scorched by his spiritual lustre (and being afraid of what would be the consequence of their offence) they ran away as children do after rousing a snake, O sage.

30. There is certainly nothing wonderful in the case of the great-souled ones, O Śaunaka, that the great sage, despite his being thus attacked by the minions of Indra, was not affected by anger, infatuation and such other perturbing feelings resulting from ahamkāra.

31. Perceiving the paleness of expression (on the countenance) of Kāma and his troop of followers and hearing from them the spiritual splendour and power of the Brāhmaṇa sage, (even) the glorious lord of the celestial region (Indra) was extremely astonished.

32. In this way, while the sage was concentrating his mind on the Lord by means of penance, study of the Vedas and self-control, Lord Viṣṇu, in order to shower his grace on him, manifested himself in the form of sages Nara and Nārāyaṇa.

33-34. They (i.e. Lords Nara and Nārāyaṇa) were fair (white) and darkblue in complexion respectively; with eyes beautiful like fresh-blown lotuses and with four arms (each).

1. ŚR enumerates the stages of love-lornship such as fascination, agitation, intoxication or maddening etc. as the "points" of Kāma's shaft.

They were clad in deerskin and bark garments and wore the rings of the sacred Kuśa grass, and a sacred threefold thread (comprised of nine strands). They carried with them a water pot (of gourd or wood specially used by ascetics) and a straight bamboo staff, a rosary of lotus-seeds, a broom to brush aside insects (without harming them) and a handful of darbha grass<sup>1</sup> (representing the Vedas). They were of a high stature and by their halo of golden lustre refulgent like the flashes of lightening, they appeared like asceticism itself incarnate, and were worshipped by prominent gods.

35. Beholding the two sages, Nara and Nārāyaṇa, the two forms of the glorious Lord, he rose to his feet and most respectfully prostrated himself before them like a staff.

36. His body, senses and the mind became deeply satisfied and tranquil through joy caused by their blissful sight. His hair stood on their ends (at the thrill of joy) and eyes were full of tears. He could not even visualize them.

37. He stood up with his palms folded and humbly bowed to them. Out of ardent desire, he was as if embracing them. And in faltering accents, he welcomed those two Lords with words Namo namaḥ (Salutations ! Bow-to you both).

38. He brought (and offered) seats to them and washed their feet. He worshipped them respectfully, offering them arghya (articles of worship) pigment, flowers and incense.

39. When both of them were comfortably seated and appeared disposed to shower their grace on him, he saluted them again and submitted to those eminent-most sages (as follows :)

Mārkaṇḍeya submitted :

40. How is it possible for (an ordinary Jīva like) me to extol you (of infinite glory) O Almighty Lord ? The vital breath (Prāṇa) can pulsate when propelled by you and speech, mind and cognitive and conative senses of embodied beings begin to function with the throbbing of the life principle. This happens even in the case of great gods like the birthless god Brahmā, god Śiva as well as of mine : (though all beings from god Brahmā are controlled by you as wooden dolls and are not free agents, but if they, with their controlled speeches or action worship you) you are the friend of the soul of those devotees (and not the friend of their bodies as the parents and other near relatives).

41. These two forms of yours, O glorious Lord, are for the protection, removal of the three types of miseries (viz. ādhyātmika, ādhibhautika, ādhidaivika) and for the conquest of death (i.e. the attainment of mokṣa or final emancipation from samsāra) of the three worlds. For the protection of the world, you assume various other bodies (such as the divine Fish, Tortoise, Boar and others). Even as a spider, you swallow up (i.e. withdraw within yourself) the whole of the universe after creating it.

42. I resort to the soles of the feet of that Protector and controller of the mobile and immobile creation. To a person who takes permanent asylum with them (the Lord's feet) the dirt<sup>1</sup> in the form of Karmas (merits and demerits) guṇas (and the consequent passions like lust, anger, etc.) and Time (and sufferings mentioned in the above verse) does not contaminate. Verily those sages who know the essence and the inner meaning of the Vedas extol, pay their respects with intense devotion, constantly worship and ever meditate upon them with the desire of attaining to them.

43. We do not know any secure and blissful place (or the summum bonum) to persons beset with fear on all sides, in all the worlds other than attainment of your feet, as you are the very embodiment of Mokṣa (emancipation from Samsāra), O Almighty Ruler ! Even the god Brahmā whose span of life and duration of position (as the head of the creation) last for two Parārdha years is terribly afraid of the Time-spirit (which is just a movement of your eye-brow). What need be said of other beings who are his creations ?

44. This being the case, I shall give up (attachment to) the body and (home, wife, son, etc.) belongings which are futile, unreal, contemptible, transient, which obscures the self (—but which is not ultimately different from the self but is basically the self itself). And I shall resort to your feet as you are transcendent, the embodiment of the true (spiritual) knowledge, (or whose will is ever true), the preceptor or father of the Jīva (who by entering the Jīva controls him and makes him perform good acts and instructs him in spiritual knowledge). (It is only by betaking oneself to your feet that) one can attain all desired objects i.e. Puruṣārthas (such as Dharma, Artha, Kāma and Mokṣa).

1. ŚR and VR note the v.l. rujaḥ 'diseases' (like karma, etc.).

45. O Lord! Although the guṇas (Sattva, rajas and tamas)—the products of the Māyā—are the causes of the sustenance, creation and destruction of the universe, and are regarded as the sportive activities of yours, your Sāttvic manifestation (i.e. Viṣṇu form) alone leads to eternal profound peace in Mokṣa (Liberation from Samsāra). O friend of the soul, but not the other two (viz. Brahmā and Rudra) for they are the sources of miseries, delusion and fear to men.

46. It is hence that intelligent persons who have understood the truth in this world, worship your pure manifestation (viz. Śrī Nārāyaṇa) which is so dear to your devotees. The followers of the Pāñcarātra school believe that pure Sattva (and no other guṇa) is the manifestation of the Supreme Person, and that through Sattva alone is attained the abode of the Lord which is the state of absolute fearlessness and full of the bliss of realization of the self which cannot be attained by other two guṇas.

47. My salutation to the glorious Lord (of six excellences) the Inner Controller, all pervading as well as manifesting himself in the form of the universe, the creator and the preceptor of the universe, the supreme Deity revealed in the dual form of sage Nārāyaṇa of perfect spiritual knowledge and Nara the best among men, the purest existence, the controller of speech (in the form of Vedic lore) and the promulgator of the path of Vedas.

48. Even though you are present in a person's own sense-organs, vital airs, heart and objects of senses (coming in the range of his perception) as the Inner Controller, his understanding is so much covered (deluded) by your deluding potency (Māyā) and his intellect is bewildered in following the path of misguiding senses that he cannot cognize you. But such a person (who is so much ignorant in the beginning) is able to know you directly on being enlightened into (the inner meaning of) the Vedas through you who are the preceptor of all.<sup>1</sup>

49. You are the Supreme Person whose vision or the knowledge that throws light on your real mysterious nature, is obtained only through the Vedas. Great sages of whom the unborn god Brahmā is prominent, are bewildered about your true nature, even though they are trying to realize you. You present yourself in a form or character conforming to the theories of all schools of thought. I bow to you who are the pure knowledge itself, concealed by the limiting conditions of the body and other environments.

CHAPTER NINE

The Lord Exhibits His Māyā

Sūta continued:

1. When the glorious Lord Nārāyaṇa, the friend of (the sage) Nara, was eulogized in these words by the intelligent sage Mārkaṇḍeya, he became highly pleased and spoke to the descendant of the Bhṛgu race.

The glorious Lord said:

2. O excellent Brāhmaṇa sage, you have attained perfection (Siddha-hood) by virtue of your concentration of mind, through unswerving devotion to me and by your austere penance, study of the Vedas and self-control.

3. We (i.e. all gods) are highly pleased with you by your observance of the great vow (of life-long celibacy). May

1. According to VJ : even though a person may be deeply learned in the Vedas, he is by nature inclined to enjoyment of objects and his judgement is clouded by Māyā. It is by God's grace alone that knowledge about him is easily obtainable (tvat-prasādena tvaj-jñānath sulabham ityarthah.

you be happy and prosperous ! Accept any desired boon from me who am the Supreme Ruler of those capable of conferring boons.

The sage (Mārkaṇḍeya) replied:

4. Victory to you. O Ruler of gods of celestials (like Brahmā, Rudra) You are the remover of the agonies of those who earnestly resort to you. O Immutable Lord, that your Lordship have been gracious enough to reveal yourself to me is in itself the greatest boon bestowed on me. And that is quite enough for me.

5. Even great gods like Brahmā regard themselves as having achieved their objective in life when they get in their minds purified (and 'ripened') through Yoga, a (mental) vision of your glorious Lotus feet. That Supreme Lord has revealed himself within the range of my perception (before my very eyes) .

6. O Lord with eyes beautiful like lotus-petals, I would, however, like to have a vision of your Māyā, deluded by whom the world along with the Protectors of the spheres like Brahmā, experience differences (such as gods, Subhuman beings, human beings, etc.) when you are the only Reality<sup>1</sup> (without a second and there is no basis for that experience) .

Sūta said:

7. Thus devoutly praised and worshipped by the sage (Mārkaṇḍeya), the Almighty Lord assured, "Yes, you will see it", and smilingly returned to his hermitage at Badarī, O sage Śaunaka.

8-9. Mārkaṇḍeya continued to stay in his hermitage brooding over the promised vision (of Māyā). While contemplating he saw Hari revealed in the sacrificial fire, the sun, the moon, waters, the earth, the wind, the sky, in his own self and everywhere around him. He worshipped him with articles of worship conceived mentally. Sometimes he forgot to worship when he was overwhelmed and lost in the flood of loving devotion.

1. VJ : How Sat i.e. Brahman or yourself is quite distinct and different from all other things.

10. O pre-eminent member of the Bhṛgu clan ! On one occasion, while he was engaged in religious meditation in the evening on the bank of the Puṣpabhadṛā, tempestuous wind suddenly began to blow.

11. Following the furiously roaring blasts of the winds, terrific clouds overcast the sky. Attended with flashes of lightning and deafening thunders, they poured volleys of rain as big as the axles of chariots.

12. Then, following the torrential downpour, were seen oceans in all the four directions around, surging forward, overflowing and swallowing up the earth, while roaring loudly with (mountain-like) high waves tossed up by stormy winds and with terrible looking alligators and awefully big whirlpools.

13. Seeing that the fourfold world of creatures (like mammals, plant-world, oviparous beings) along with himself are afflicted both inside and outside with waters that rose sky-high, with the scorching rays of the sun, blasts of the stormy winds and strokes of lightning and the whole earth is submerged in waters, the sage was deeply disturbed and afraid at heart.

14. Even as he was looking on (in consternation), the boundless ocean terrific-looking on account of (mountainous) waves, and with its waters tossed and whirling by tempestuous winds was filled by the pouring clouds, overflowed the earth and submerged it along with its continents, sub-continents and mountain-chains.

15. All the worlds including the earth, the sky, the celestial world, and the stellar and planetary systems along with their inhabitants, and all the cardinal points were sub-merged and lost in that deluge. The sage Mārkaṇḍeya alone survived. He was drifting with his matted hairs scattered and hanging like a mad, blind, person.

16. Sorely oppressed with hunger and thirst, troubled by crocodiles and whales, tossed and buffeted by stormy winds and waves, enveloped in endless darkness and overcome with fatigue, the sage drifted along and could not know the directions or the sky or the earth.

17. Sometimes he fell into a great whirl-pool; sometimes he was tossed at random by waves: at times he was bitten by aquatic animals who fought with each other while trying to catch hold of him.

18. Sometimes he was over-come with grief, sometimes with infatuation: sometimes he experienced pleasure, sometimes pain and at times fear. Sometimes he felt that he was about to die, while at times, he suffered from diseases and other troubles.

19. Innumerable (billions upon billions) years passed away (he felt) while he was being drifted and tossed in that deluge and his self (mind) was hypnotised by the Māyā of Viṣṇu.

20. While being tossed about at random (and thus wandering) in the waters of the deluge, he caught sight of a young banyan tree adorned with fruit and foliage on a summit of the earth (protruding over waters).

21. On the north-eastern branch of that tree and on (the cavity of) its leaf, he beheld an infant (as if) swallowing up the darkness by its brilliant splendour.

22-23. It was like a dark-emerald in complexion; its countenance was beautiful like lotus; it had a conch-shaped neck, broad chest, shapely nose and charming brows. It appeared graceful with its locks of curly hair moving to and fro by (the wind of) its breath; its beautiful ears like (the open side of) a conch, were adorned with pomegranate-like red flowers (or ear-rings of that shape and colour); its nectar-like white (sweet) smile was rendered rosy by the reddish splendour of its coral-like crimson lips.

24. The ends of its eyes were reddish like the interior of a lotus; its smiling looks and glances captivated one's heart; its belly, shaped like a leaf of a sacred fig tree, appeared beautiful with its deep navel covered with the throbbing folds of the belly which heaved up and down with its breaths.

25. The babe caught hold of its own lotus-foot with its hands of charming fingers, and placing it in its mouth, was sucking it.

26. The very sight of that infant, all his fatigue was removed and he felt refreshed. The lotuses in the form of his heart and eyes as if blossomed with ecstasy; (through the thrill of joy) his hairs stood on their ends. Though he was overcome with awe to see that miraculous form (the wonderful baby), he (made bold and) approached the babe to make enquiries of it.

27. In the meanwhile, along with the inhaling of the baby, Mārkaṇḍeya, the descendant of Bhṛgu was drawn inside (the baby's) body like a mosquito. There (in the belly of the baby) he saw the entire universe arranged systematically as it was before the deluge—at which he was extremely surprised and confused.

28. With wonderment he saw therein the sky, the earth, the aerial region, hosts of heavenly luminaries, mountains and oceans, continents along with their sub-continents, the cardinal points, gods and Asuras, forests, countries, rivers, cities, quarries or mines, villages, pastoral habitations, hermitages (or stages in life-āśrama), (Vārṇas) of people engaged in their own respective duties.

29. He further beheld there the five gross-elements (bhūtas) and their products, the Time with its various divisions such as yugas, kalpas and everything else that can act as the cause of the world—in short the whole universe was manifested here, as if it were a reality.

30. He also espied the mountain Himālaya, that very same river Puṣpavahā and his own hermitage on its bank and sages dwelling in his neighbourhood. Even as he was keenly observing that universe, he was exhaled out of the body of the child and fell in the sea of deluge.

31. He perceived once more the banyan tree growing on the summit of the (submerged) earth and the child that was lying on the hollow leaf and that he was being observed with its side-long glances accompanied with nectar like sweet smiles (by that mysterious child).

32. Then Mārkaṇḍeya who was over-exhausted perceived that child who, entering through his eyes, had enthroned himself firmly in his heart, proceeded to embrace it who was (no other than) the Supra-sensuous Lord Viṣṇu !

33. But that very moment, the infant who was the glorious Lord Viṣṇu himself, the absolute master of Yoga who abides in the hearts of all instantly vanished from the sage like the desire (or undertaking) of an ungodly (or an unlucky) person.

34. O Brāhmaṇa sage ! Following the Lord, the banyan tree, the cosmic waters that deluged the whole world (and submerged it) disappeared in a moment and the sage found himself in his own hermitage as before.

CHAPTER TEN

God Śiva's Boon to Mārkaṇḍeya

Sūta said:

1. Having thus visualized the great magnificence of the Yoga-māyā (yogic deluding Potency) displayed by Lord Nārāyaṇa, Mārkaṇḍeya again sought asylum with him only (for protection).

Mārkaṇḍeya prayed:

2. I have be-taken myself to the soles of your feet which afford protection from fear (or Mokṣa—the real fearlessness in liberation from Saṃsāra) to those who resort to them as your Māyā<sup>1</sup> which apparently appears as enlightenment, deludes even the learned people (who have not sought asylum with you) into the egoistic feeling that they are really erudite and (spiritually) wise.

Sūta said:

3. While passing through the sky on his bull along with his consort Pārvatī and surrounded by his legions (of spirits etc.) the glorious god Rudra<sup>1</sup> noticed Mārkaṇḍeya who sat motionless (meditating Hari).

1. VR : Even the learned are deluded with their minds distracted by the ignorance caused by Māyā.

4-5. When goddess Umā (Pārvatī) observed the sage, she requested god Śiva (the Lord of mount Kailāsa): “Be pleased to cast a glance at the Brāhmaṇa, O Lord, see how his body, senses and heart are perfectly controlled and unperturbed like the sea, the waters and (multitudes of) aquatic animals in which have become motionless after the subsidence of the stormy wind. As you are the bestower of (boons granting) the accomplishment of (your devotee’s) objects, may you be pleased to grant him the fruit of his penance.

The glorious Lord Śiva said:

6. This Brāhmaṇa sage does not at all covet any blessing or superhuman power (like aṇimā, laghimā) or even Mokṣa (Liberation from saṁsāra) as he has developed the highest devotion to the immutable, Supreme person (Lord Viṣṇu).

7. O beloved Pārvatī! Let us however have a talk with this virtuous sage; for meeting and association with pious persons is (in itself) the greatest gain.

8. Replying thus the glorious god Śiva, who is the resort of devotees, approached the sage as he was promulgator and preceptor of all lores, and is the In-dwelling Controller of all embodied beings.

9. (Being in spiritual trance) his mental activities were so much restrained that he forgot himself, the universe around him and hence, he could not perceive (god Śiva and his consort) the Rulers and Souls of all beings, even though they approached him personally.

10. Knowing his absorbed mental condition, Lord<sup>2</sup> Śiva the sovereign ruler of the universe, by his Yogic Power entered the cavity of his heart as air does through pores. The sage was surprised to see in his heart the sudden manifestation.

1. It was really Lord Nārāyaṇa who assumed the form of Śiva and consoled Mārkaṇḍeya who was exhausted (by his experience of the deluge—display of Māyā) ŚR.

2. According to a definition quoted by SD., bhagavān is one who is the knower of creation and destruction, coming and going (the past, present and future) of beings and with Vidyā and Avidyā.

11-13. He perceived god Śiva's entry into his heart and was astonished at the flash-like manifestation of that god of a high stature, with three eyes, ten arms, matted locks of reddish brown hair shining like streaks of lightning, appearing brilliant like the rising sun, wearing the skin of tiger (as an apparel) armed with a trident, a Khatvāṅga ( a skull-topped club) a shield and carrying in his hands a rosary of (Rudrākṣa) beads, a Damaru (an hour-glass-shaped handy drum) a begging bowl of (human) skull, a sword and a bow. Amazed at this sudden revelation of the god, he woke up from his trance to know what it was and whence it appeared.

14. The sage opened his eyes and perceived god Śiva the sole preceptor of the three worlds present (before him) along with his divine consort Umā and his attendants.

15. He respectfully worshipped god Śiva, along with his consort Umā and his attendants by giving them warm welcome offering them seats, water to wash hands and feet, sandal paste, wreaths of flowers, burning frank-incense and waving lights in the customary way.

16. He humbly submitted, "O Omni-present Lord, through your own majestic splendour you revel in your own blissful nature. It is because of you that the whole world feels happy. What service can I render to you, O Ruler of the Universe?

17* I bow to you who are all auspiciousness, devoid of guṇas (and hence tranquil), the embodiment of Sattva (in the Viṣṇu form) bestowing happiness on all. I salute you, the support of the rajas attribute (in the form of Brahmā). Hail to you (in the Rudra form) the embodiment of tamas but not terrific or deluded.

Sūta said:

18. Praised in this way, the glorious Lord, the foremost among gods and the resort of saintly persons, was highly pleased with him. The gracious-minded god laughed heartily and spoke to the sage (as follows).

* VR : Hail to you the bestower of auspiciousness on the world, one devoid of the six states of life (from conception to death); conferrer of great happiness on all; constituted of pure sattva (you are Viṣṇu); comprised of rajas (you are god Brahmā); and formidable as an embodiment of tamas you are Rudra as at present.

Lord Śiva said:

19. We three (gods Brahmā, Viṣṇu and myself) are the Rulers of those who are competent to grant boon. Seek from us whatever boon you please. (You should not say “No to this”) Our sight cannot be futile. A person can attain immortality (i.e. Mokṣa) through us (i.e. by virtue of seeing us).

20. Brāhmaṇas are by nature pious, tranquil, free from attachment, affectionate to all beings, constant in their devotion to us, above the feelings of envy and animosity and looking upon all as equals.

21. Guardians of the world along with the people, I, god Brahmā and the Supreme Lord Hari himself bow, worship and wait upon them.

22* We resort to (you) Brāhmaṇas as they do not perceive the slightest difference between me, Lord Viṣṇu and god Brahmā; nor do they so between themselves and other persons.

23. The sacred places (tirthas) consisting of (holy) water and gods made out of earth and stone (into which the presence of the deity is to be charged by invocation of mantras are not the real sacred places or gods as they purify after a long process of time. But you (Brāhmaṇa sages) purify at the very first sight only.

* VR : Those Brāhmaṇas (knowing that I or God Brahmā do not have a separate existence apart from Viṣṇu) do not perceive the slightest difference in Viṣṇu and us (I and god Brahmā) being connected with his body (Brahmaśarīrake maccharīrake cācyute ca).

VR states that the words—ātman and jana mean two different souls in unintelligent bodies. In his long commentary, he elucidates his viśiṣṭādvaita stance with reference to cit, acit and God.

VJ (i) Those wise Brāhmaṇas know that Hari is in me and also present in god Brahmā. Hence they do not see any difference between Hari and us (due to his presence in us). Hari abides as the Innercontroller (antar-yāmin) of all mobile and immobile creation. They see no difference in Hari and that creation (as Hari is the same in all).

(ii) They have no misunderstanding about me, Brahmā, mobile beings and immobiles. They do not identify us with Viṣṇu. They see each as is each factually (i.e. separate).

24. We pay obeisance to those Brāhmaṇas who preserve (in themselves) our (verbal) representation in the form of three Vedas by concentration of mind, meditation, performance of austerities, Vedic studies and self control (consisting of observance of silence, etc.)

25. At the very sight of and by merely listening (to your life and works) persons who have committed great sins and persons (even) of the lowest caste become purified. What need be said of persons who engage themselves in conversation with them (or praise or live in their company) ?

Sūta said :

26. The speech of god Śiva who wears the crescent moon as an adornment on the head, was so much over full with secrets of dharma and was a reservoir of sweet nectar (or was sweet like nectar to the ears ) that the sage did not feel sated with it.

27. The sage was bewildered by the Māyā of Viṣṇu (and was made to revolve through the cycle of birth and deaths) and was put through an extremely severe trial. He felt that all his agonies had been completely removed by the nectarine speech of god Śiva. He addressed to him as follows :

The sage (Mārkaṇḍeya) said :

28. O how wonderful ! This sportive act of the almighty Ruler (of the universe) is incomprehensible to embodied beings like us, inasmuch as the Rulers of the universe (like Brahmā, Rudra) pay respect to and praise those governed by them.

29. Generally, in order to make people perform their religious duties, these teachers of embodied beings practise them and when these duties are performed by others they show their approbation, and praise the persons performing them.

30. Just as a magician is not affected by his magic creations conjured up by his enchanting power, the great prowess of the glorious Lord (in you) is not affected (lit. spoilt or tainted) by your acts (of bowing, praising us).

31.* Having evolved this universe by his will power, he entered it of his own accord in the form of an individual soul (Jīva) who, like a man in the state of dreaming, appears to be the agent of acts which are really brought about by guṇas (guṇas are the real cause or doers of acts not the Jīva).

32. Salutation to the glorious all powerful Lord (Śiva) who is comprised of three guṇas yet is their master (or the director). I bow to Him who is absolute, one without a second, the preceptor (or father) of the universe and the very embodiment of Brahman.

33. What other boon can I solicit from you when your direct vision is itself a boon, as by your vision a man is blest with all blessings and gets all his wishes realized.

34. I, however, seek one boon from you who are perfect and shower all desired objects (as blessings on your devotees)—May I cherish constant devotion to Lord Acyuta (Viṣṇu) to persons who are his votaries and also unswerving devotion to you.

Sūta said :

35. When Lord Śiva was thus worshipped and extolled in very sweet words by the Sage, he (though willing of his own accord to confer a boon) who was urged with approbation by his consort Pārvatī, spoke to Mārkaṇḍeya.

36. “O great sages, as you cherish (constant) devotion to Lord Viṣṇu (who is beyond the range of sense-preception) all your desires will be fulfilled. May you enjoy hallowing glory, immunity from old age and death to the end of the Kalpa.

* VR : The Lord as the Inner controller abides in the Jīva (individual soul). Being thus inseparably connected, he appears as if doing the acts, when factually the Jīva is the real doer—iva-śabdena paramārthataḥ puṇyā-puṇyātmaka-Karma Kartṛtvābhāvaḥ paramātmāni sūcyate.

VJ : The Lord having created this universe by his volition has entered into it as Antaryāmin (i) while abiding therein he appears to be doing acts through senses like the Jīva. As a matter of fact, he is not affected by them, just as a person creating objects (like an elephant or a horse etc.) in a dream is factually unaffected by them (lipto no bhavati).

37. As you are invested with glorious lustre of Brahman may you be blest with the knowledge of the past, present and future and possess spiritual wisdom along with non-attachment and be the master (i. e. author) of one Purāṇa (now known as Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa).

38. Having conferred these boons on the sage, the three-eyed God departed telling (on the way) the austere penance and other meritorious acts of the sage and the display of Lord Viṣṇu's Māyā experienced by him.

39. That eminent-most descendent of Bhṛgu who has attained the glorious power of the great yoga (with spiritual knowledge and whose heart is merged in unflinching devotion to Hari (and has become as if one within) is still seen moving about on the earth.

40. In this way how the intelligent Mārkaṇḍeya experienced the miraculous power and glory of the Māyā of the Lord, has been described to you.

41. This (power exhibited by Māyā and experienced by Mārkaṇḍeya as extending over seven Kalpas as held in old tradition) was an accidental matter (a personal experience through the grace of Lord Nārāyaṇa and not a general experience of all. But some persons not knowing the working of the Māyā regard the deluge experienced by Mārkaṇḍeya as the regular process of appearance and disappearance of men (the creation and dissolution of the universe) which the Māyā of the Supreme Lord brings about repeating it from eternity.

42. O worthiest of the Bhṛgu race, he who listens to with wrapt attention or he who narrates this (account of Mārkaṇḍeya described to you and which concerns the glory of Viṣṇu) both of them will be rid of Samisāra produced by the latent effects of Karman.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

*Significance of the Various parts of the Lord's Image,
The Retinue of the sun-God per month*

Śaunaka said:

1. O (great) devotee of the Lord ! You are the most prominent among the versatiles (knowers of different Śāstras). You know the heart—the secret conclusions of the scriptures of different works on Tantra. (Our forebear Mārkaṇḍeya was expert in the Tāntric way of worshipping the Lord. We want to know the tāntric way he adopted for visualization of the Lord. Hence, we request your worship to discourse upon the following subject:

2. The Lord of goddess Śrī is essentially pure consciousness (and pure sattva). But when experts in (and authors of) Tantras deal with meditation and process of worshipping the Lord, they conceive him as possessed of limbs of the body (e.g. hands and feet) attended upon (by Garuḍa), armed with weapons (like the discus Sudarśana), adorned with precious stones and ornaments (like the Kaustubha gem).

3. O Sūta ! We are anxious to know the Tāntric course of active worship by becoming thoroughly proficient in which a mortal may attain immortality (Mokṣa as the sage Mārkaṇḍeya did). May God bless you. But be pleased to elucidate of what principles are they (limbs, attendants etc.) presumed to be constituted (and the origin of this conception).

Sūta said:

4. Having first bowed to my preceptors, I shall describe to you the various glorious manifestations of Lord Viṣṇu (such as the cosmic form—virāṭ) even though it is difficult to comprehend them—Forms which are (to some extent) described in details by (authoritative Tantras) teachers like the lotus-born god Brahmā and others (like Śaṅkara, Nārada) in the light of the Vedas and texts (saṁhitās), Tantras.

5. That celebrated cosmic form—Virāṭ—consisting of the sixteen modifications (viz. mind, five cognitive senses, five conative organs and five gross elements—mahābhūtas) is evolved out of nine principles such as Māyā (or Prakṛti) and others eight, viz. mahat (the principle of cosmic intelligence), sūtra (the active aspect of mahat), ahaṅkāra (the cosmic ego) and five tan-mātrās (subtle elements). When the spirit or the intelligent Principle presides over it to activate it the three worlds make their appearance.

6. This verily constitutes the Puruṣa or Virāt (Cosmic) form. Of that Lord, the earth is regarded as his feet, the heavens, the head; the mid-air region, the navel; the sun, the eyes; vāyu (wind or air) his nostrils; cardinal points, as his ears.

7. His organ of creation, Prajāpati (the presiding deity of creation); the anus of the Lord is the (god of) death; the guardians of the spheres, his arms; the Moon (its presiding deity) is the mind; Yama, the eye-brows.

8. Modesty or Shyness, his upper lip; greed, his lower lip; the moonlight represents the (rightness of his) teeth; illusion is his smile; trees (i.e. the plant world), the hair on his body, and the clouds form the locks on the head of that Supreme Person.

9. According as the body of an individual human being is measured with reference to the dimensions and dispositions of the parts of his body, the dispositions and proportion of the personality of the Supreme Person are to be regarded similarly with reference to the spheres in the universe. (Thus a man is seven spans in height, the seven worlds such as bhūr, bhuvaḥ, etc. are to be presumed such 'spans' in the case of the cosmic person.)

10. The eternal (lit. unborn) Lord wears the pure consciousness of the Jīva under the name Kaustubha and the splendour radiated from it is the well-known streak of golden hair—Śrī-vatsa on his (right part of the) bosom.

11. He wears the Māyā constituted of many guṇas (Sattva, rajas, etc.) as the Vana-mālā (garland of five kinds of special flowers). His yellow silken garment (round his loins) is constituted of the Vedas; his sacred thread is the sacred syllable OM consisting of three syllables A+U+M.

12. The God wears the systems of Sāṅkhya and Yoga as the alligator-shaped ear-rings. He puts on as diadem the highest position of god Brahmā which dispels the fear of all people and affords protection to the world.

13. The seat called Ananta (serpent Śeṣa) occupied by him is the Unmanifest Prakṛti. His lotus of seat constituted of Sattva guṇa which includes—the six divine excellences, viz. dharma (piety), Jñāna (knowledge), Vairāgya (renunciation, non-attachment) aiśvarya (universal dominion), Śrī (affluence) and yaśas (glory) and of divine powers (known as Vimalā, utkarṣiṇī, Jñāna, Kriyā, Yoga, Pahvī, Satya, Iśāna and Anugraha).

14-15. He wields the principle of mukhya-prāṇa or vital air accompanied by energy, fortitude and strength as his mace; the excellent conch symbolises the principle of water; his discus Sudarśana is the principle of power or fire; His sword clear like the sky is the principle of ether; a shield represents Tamas; His Śārṅga bow stands for the Time-spirit (Kāla) and the quiver (of arrows) consists of the principle of Karma (action).

16*. They (i.e. learned experts in traditional lore) state that the (cosmic) sense-organs are his arrows; the (cosmic) mind capable of activation is his Chariot; the subtle elements (tanmātrās) form the exterior of his Chariot; it is by particular positions of his fingers and hands (technically called mudrās) such as Varadā, abhayaḍā) that he confers blessings or gives protection.

17**. The particular place where the Lord is worshipped should be conceived as the orb of the sun or the inner Agni's sphere; initiation by a preceptor by imparting a mantra is the self-consecration rendering one eligible to worship the Lord; and the act of his worship is the means of absolving one's self of all sins.

* VJ Regards Pṛthvī (the earth) as the chariot of Hari and the five objects of senses are his manifestations. The objects of conative organs are his physical activities.

GS is not clear on the function of tanmātrās.

**VJ : The spot of Hari's worship should be Cakrābja and other sacred spot: the real consecration is the purification resulting from God's presence in the body; the worship of God is the means for absolving one's self of all sins.

18. (After explaining the 'Lotus-seat', the significance of the lotus play-fully held on the hand is explained. The Lord (Bhagavān) holds in his hand a lotus sportively; the lotus concretely represents the six characteristic implied in the term bhaga in Bhagavān<sup>1</sup>. The Lord has (by his side attendants holding) a chowrie and a fan representing Dharma and glory respectively.

19. O Brāhmaṇas ! The umbrella held over his head stands for his abode Vaikuṇṭha, the absolutely safe place (with no fear from Kāla, Karma, etc.). The Veda with its three divisions (Rgveda, Śāman, yajus) i.e. the sacrifices etc. prescribed in the Veda represents his carrier Garuḍa<sup>2</sup> who bears Yajña, the Supreme Person (Viṣṇu)

20. The inseparable energy or lustre of Lord Hari is the glorious Śrī, the goddess of affluence and beauty. Viśvaksena, the well-known commandant of Viṣṇu's attendants is the concrete representation of Pañcarātra and other Āgamic works, while the (eight) superhuman powers or attributes like aṇimā (capacity to assume atomic size) and others are the attendants at his door like Nanda (Sunanda, etc.).

21* The Supreme Person (Nārāyaṇa) himself is manifested as Vāsudeva, Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha. He is to be worshipped and meditated in these manifestations<sup>3</sup>.

1. The six distinguishing characteristics are enumerated in the following traditional verse : aśvaryaśya samagrasya dharmasya yaśasaḥ śrīyaḥ / Jñāna-vairāgyayoścaiva saṅgām bhaga itiranā // They are : Rulership, righteousness or religiosity, glory, affluence, wisdom and non-attachment.

2. The vedic authority quoted for this by ŚR, viz. the mantra suparṇo'si Garutmān striṣṭte śiraḥ is found in Tait. Saṁhitā 4: 1 : 10 : 5 (Vaj. Saṁhitā 12 : 4 and a number of Vedic texts).

* (The doctrine of Vyūhas, manifestation of the Lord and their worship is now explained—SR.)

3. VR explains that the following Vyūhas preside over the following states :

- (1) Vāsudeva : Emancipated stage (Mukti-avasthā).
- (2) Saṅkarṣaṇa : Dreaming state.
- (3) Pradyumna : Wakefulness.
- (4) Aniruddha : Dreamless deep sleep.
- (5) Śrīnārāyaṇa eva svayam mūrtibhedair upāśyaḥ—SR.

22. That glorious Lord is to be contemplated (within one's own self) as Viśva, Taijasa, Prājña and the Fourth (ātman or Vāsudeva) associated with the states of wakefulness, dreaming, dreamless sleep and self-realisation. It is under aforesaid forms that he guides the functions connected with external objects, the mind, the false notions or ignorance and the knowledge that stands as witness to them.<sup>1</sup>

23. In this way the glorious Lord Nārāyaṇa with his foresaid limbs of the body, attendants, weapons and ornaments and in his above mentioned four manifestations (Vyūhas), viz. Vāsudeva, Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha, assumes also the four aspects such as Viśva Taijasa and others—Yet he is the same glorious Lord Hari, the controller (of the universe).<sup>2</sup>

24. O prominent Brāhmaṇa ! The above-described Lord is the source of the Vedas, the self-illuminating, omniscient, perfect in his own glory and essential blissfulness. It is (out of sportiveness) that under different designations (such as Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Rudra) that he creates, protects and dissolves the universe by his own Māyā. But his consciousness remains unobstructed and unclouded. Though he is described (in Śāstras) as differentiated, he is really one and is realized as such by his votaries as being their own self.

1. The Lord, in the wakeful state, presiding over the Viśva stage, cognises external objects such as touch, sound. In this way this verse can be tabulated as follows :—

- (1) Wakefulness—Viśva—artha (external objects)
- (2) Dream-state—Taijasa—indriya.
- (3) Dreamless sleep—Prājña—manas
- (4) Turiya—The self Jñāna.
(Self-realization)

2. VR thinks that the above mentioned four forms of Nārāyaṇa are for the creation, protection, dissolution and liberation of the world. Thus Aniruddha creates, Pradyumna protects, Saṅkarṣaṇa destroys and Vāsudeva liberates the world. BP repeats the same.

VJ : aṅgas—the four forms of the Lord.

Upāṅgas—God Brahmā and other gods in whom the Lord's presence is prominent.

25. O Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the friend of Arjuna, the prominent leader of Vṛṣṇis, the fire unto the families of Kṣātrīyas who were inimical to (and a burden) to the earth; O Lord of undiminishing energy and prowess; O Govinda (Protector of cows), whose hallowing glory is sung by the cowherd women of Vraja and servants i.e. devotees like Nārada and whose name and deeds are auspicious to hear! O Lord, be pleased to protect us, your servants (Votaries).

26. He who, rising early at dawn, purifies himself by taking a bath and with concentrated mind repeats the above-mentioned characteristics (of aṅga, upāṅga, etc.) of the Supreme Person, realizes Brahman as abiding in his own heart.

Śaunaka said:

27. As the glorious Śuka told the listening Parīkṣit (one protected by Viṣṇu) that a group of seven (pairs) consisting of sages, Gandharvas, Apsaras, Nāgas, Yakṣas and Rākṣaṣas and presided over by the sun-god, carry out their duties each month (and are substituted by a new batch next month.)<sup>1</sup>

28. Be pleased to recount to us who are devout and faithful the names, functions of these along with their presiding deities and of Hari's manifestation as the indwellers of the sun-god.

Sūta said:

29. This (visible) sun-god who controls the world (by maintaining the course of life in it) and revolves in his orbit, is created by the beginningless Māyā of Lord Viṣṇu who abides as an indwelling soul of all embodied beings.

30. Though one without a second, it is Lord Hari, the creator of the world, the one soul of all people who is the sun-god. He is spoken under diverse names by the sages as he is the source of different Vedic rites.

31. O Brāhmaṇa Śaunaka! It is due to Hari's beginningless Māyā that Hari is spoken of in nine forms, viz. time, place activity, the doer, the instrument, duty or performance, sacred book, material substance (rice, etc.) and the fruit (viz. celestial world, etc.)

1. Vide Supra 5.21.18, P. 748.

32. In order to help the conduct and functions of the world, he assumes the form of Time (out of the nine mentioned above) and goes through his course in twelve months beginning with Caitra along with his twelve groups of attendants.

33. The sun-god, under the designation, Dhātā, Kṛta-sthalī (the heavenly damsel), Heti, (the demon), Vāsuki (the serpent), Rathakṛt (the Yakṣa), Pulastya (the Sage) and Tumbaru (the Gandharva)—all these run the world in the first month (Caitra) or Madhu.

(In the following verses the names of the sun and his attendants are given in the same order as in verse 33 above).

34. Aryamā, Puñjikasthalī, Praheti, Kachhanīra, Athaujā, Pulaha and Nārada—these run the month of Vaiśākha or (Mādhava).

35. Mitra, Menakā, Pauruṣeya, Taksaka, Rathasvana, Atri, and Hāhā—these run the month of Jyeṣṭha (or Śukramāsa).

36. Varuṇa, Rambhā, Chitrasvana, Śukra, Sahajanya, Vasiṣṭha and Huhū—these run the month of Āṣāḍha (or Śucimāsa).

37. Indra, Pramlocā, Varya, Elāpatra, Śrotā, Aṅgirā and Viśvāvasu—these run the month of Srāvaṇa (or Nabhomāsa).

38. Vivasvān, Anumlocā, Vyāghra, Śaṅkhapāla, Āsāraṇa, Bhṛgu and Ugrasena—these run the month called Bhādrapada or (Nabhasya).

39. Puṣā, Ghṛtācī, Vāta, Dhanañjaya, Suruci, Gautama and Suṣeṇa—these run the month of Māgha. (or Tapo-māsa).

40. Parjanya, Senajit, Varcā, Airāvata, Kratu, Bharadvāja and Viśva—these run the month named Phālguna or (Tapasya).

41*. Again, Amśu, Urvaśī, Vidyuc-chatru, Mahāśaṅkha, Tārksya, Kaśyapa and Ṛtasena—these run the month of Mārgaśīrṣa (or Saho-māsa).

* There is a change in the usual order of the names of these months. ŚR attributes it to the change of Kalpa though the explanation is not convincing, so do GS and GD follow SR. VR and BP suggest us to adjust the order of *śloka*s.

42. Bhaga, Pūrvacitti, Sphūrja, Karkoṭaka, Ūrṇa, Āyu and Ariṣṭanemi—these run the month of Pauṣa (or Puṣyamāsa).

43. Again, Tvaṣṭā, Tilottamā, Brahmāpeta, Kambala, Śatajit, Jamadagni and Dhṛtarāṣṭra are the presiding set in the month of Āśvina. (iṣambhara).

44. Viṣṇu, Rambhā, Makhāpeta, Aśvatara, Satyajit, Visvāmitra and Sūryavarca—these run the month of Kārttika (or Ūrja-māsa).

45. These constitute the glory of the sun-god, who is no other than Lord Viṣṇu himself. Those who remember them both in the morning and in the evening, day after day are rid of their sins by them.

46. This celebrated sun-god courses round this world in each of the twelve months (of the year) along with his attendants (mentioned above), and promotes and expands goodness of the mind (or intellect helping people to perform religious rites), securing their happiness here and bliss hereafter (This reminds one of the Gāyatri mantra).

47. Sages who attend the sun-god (as members of his entourage) praise him with the hymns from the Sāmaveda, Rg-Veda and Yajur-veda pertaining to his glory. Gandharvas sing songs (in praise of him). The celestial damsels dance before him.

48. The Nāgas (Serpents) bind the chariot fast (like cords), Yakṣas make the chariot ready; the mighty Rākṣasas push the chariot from behind.

49. (The group of) sixty thousand pure-minded (tiny) Vālakhilya sages (who are always with the sun-god all the year round) proceed ahead of him and extol the Almighty God with panegyric hymns.

50. In this way, the eternal (beginningless and endless), birthless, glorious Lord Hari divides himself (into twelve forms, each presiding over the sun (for the period of one month) and protects the world in every Kalpa.

CHAPTER TWELVE

A Synoptic Review of the twelve Skandhas of Śrīmad Bhāgavata

Sūta said:

1. Salutation to the great virtue in the form of devotion to Lord Hari. Hail to Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the creator of the universe. Having bowed down to Brāhmaṇas (who are devoted to God). I now enumerate the eternal courses of righteousness.

2. Here has been narrated to you the miraculous story (in the form of this Bhāgavata) of Lord Viṣṇu, about which you asked me and which is really to the good of human beings (and is fit to be related and listened to in the assembly of pious persons).

3. Here has been glorified Lord Hari who destroys the sins of all; who is Nārāyaṇa, the controller of sense-organs and is the protector of his devotees (or Sātvatas)

4. Here has been described the Supreme attributeless Brahman which is the source as well as the end of all creation; also the topic of spiritual knowledge and realisation as well as means of realising them.

5. Here has been delineated in details the Yoga or discipline of Devotion (which is both a means and an end in itself,) as well as renunciation (Vairāgya) which is brought about and thus depends on devotion. Then follows the story of the birth, etc. of king Parīkṣit which has been preceded by the story of the previous births of Nārada.

6. The vow of the royal sage Parīkṣit to fast unto death due to the curse imprecated on him by a Brāhmaṇa, the dialogue between king Parīkṣit and the prominent Brāhmaṇa Śuka (Here ends the first Skandha).

7. The ascent of the soul to higher regions when departed from the body through Yogic process; the dialogue between Nārada and god Brahmā; the description of the incarnation of god Viṣṇu in a serial order; the cosmic evolution from Prakṛti from the beginning.

8. The conversation between Vidura and Uddhava and that between Vidura and Maitreya; an enquiry regarding the compilation of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa and the dormant state of the Supreme Man during Pralaya.

9. Then follows the description of the evolution of the universe from Prakṛti by the disturbance of its guṇas, the evolution of the seven categories which are both the cause and the effect as well as their modifications; then follows the formation of the egg of the universe from which Virāṭ Puruṣa was evolved.

10. The nature of Time both gross and subtle; the blooming of the cosmic lotus; (containing 14 worlds—bhuvanas) lifting up of the earth from the bottom of the ocean and slaying the demon Hiranyākṣa.

11-12. Creation of the celestial world; the subhuman beings and of the subterranean regions; creation of Rudras; the constitution of one half of his person as male and the other half as female by god Brahmā, from which was born Manu called Svāyambhuva and of Śatarūpā the ideal first woman; the progeny of the wives of Kardama, the Lord of Creation.

13. The descent of the glorious Lord as the great-souled Kapila; the dialogue between the intelligent Kapila and his mother Devahūti.

14. The creation of the nine Lords of creation (Prajā-patis); interruption in the sacrifice of Dakṣa; the account of kings Dhruva, Pṛthu and Prācinabarhis.

15. The conversation with Nārada; the story of king Priyavrata; and then O Brāhmaṇas, the account of Kings Nābhi, Ṛṣabha and Bharata.

16. Description of island-continents and their subsections called Varṣas and seas separating the continents; the mountain-systems and the river-systems in this continent described; the disposition of the stellar system (stars, planets, etc.) and the arrangements of the subterranean regions and of hills.

17. The birth of Dakṣa from Pracetas; the progeny of his daughters, viz. gods, demons, human beings, sub-human beings (beasts, etc.) trees, birds, etc.

18. The birth and death of Vṛtra, the son of Tvaṣṭr and that of the two sons of Diti, viz. Hiranyākṣa and Hiranyakaśipu and the story of the noble soul Prahlāda (Here end Skandhas—VI & VII).

19. A connected account of the fourteen Manvantaras; deliverance of the king of elephants (from a giant Crocodile); Various incarnations of Viṣṇu such as Hayagrīva and others.

20. Viṣṇu's descent like the divine tortoise, the divine fish, Narasimha (Half man—half lion); the churning of the ocean of milk for obtaining nectar by gods and demons.

21. The great war between gods and Asuras; a description of royal dynasties; the birth of Ikṣvāku and his race as also of the great-souled Sudyumna.

22. Here have been described the stories of Ilā and of Tārā; the history of the solar race of kings such as Śaśāda, Nṛga and others.

23. The narrative of Sukanyā, the daughter of Śaryāti and of the highly intelligent Kākutstha and of Khaṭvāṅga, of Māndhātṛ, of sage Saubhari and of king Sagara.

24. The story of Rāma, the king of Kosala which eradicates all sins; Nimi and his giving up of his body; the origin of the race of Janakas.

25. The account of Paraśurāma, the chief of the Bhṛgu clan, and his wiping out the Kṣātriya race; the account of the lunar race which started from Purūravas, the son of Ilā and of Yayāti and Nahuṣa.

26-27. The accounts of Bharata, the son of Duṣyanta, of Śantanu and his son. The race of Yadu, the eldest son of Yayāti has been described—the race in which the Lord of the universe under the name Kṛṣṇa took his incarnation; his birth in the house of Vasudeva and growing up in Gokula.

28. The innumerable and miraculous deeds of the enemy of Asuras, viz. of Kṛṣṇa have been described: drinking up of the life of Pūtanā along with the milk in her breast, the kicking up of Śakaṭa while a child.

29. Crushing of the demon Tṛṇāvarta as well as of Baka and Vatsa and of Dhenuka along with his brother and slaying of Pralamba.

30. Protection of the cow-herds from the encircling forest conflagration; subjugation of the great serpent Kāliya and the deliverance of Nanda.

31. The observance of the Kātyāyanī vow by Gopa girls whereby Lord Kṛṣṇa was pleased (and granted a boon) : Showering of grace on the wives of Brāhmaṇa sacrificers; the repentance of Brāhmaṇas for not recognising the real nature of the Lord.

32. Lifting up of the mount Govardhana; Indra and the heavenly cow Surabhi worship Kṛṣṇa and bathe him in milk; Kṛṣṇa's pastimes (Rāsakriḍā) with Gopīs during several nights.

33. Slaying of the evil-minded Śaṅkhacūḍa and of demons Ariṣṭa and Keśin; arrival of Akrūra; subsequent departure of Balarāma and Kṛṣṇa.

34. The wailing of Gopīs of Vraja; visit to different places in Mathurā; killing of the elephant (Kuvalayāpīḍa) and of Muṣṭika, Cāṇūra, Kaṁsa and others (his eight brothers).

35. Restoring to his preceptor Sāndipani his dead son; good offices to the Yādava clansmen at Mathurā.

36. Annihilation of the armies brought by Jarāsandha many times, with the help of Uddhava and Balarāma, O Brāhmaṇas; killing of the king of Yavanas through Mucakunda; founding of the city of Kuśasthalī or Dvārakā.

37. Bringing of heavenly Pārijāta tree and the celestial assembly hall called Sudharmā; taking away of Rukmiṇī by Hari after destroying the enemies in a battle.

38. Yawning of god Śiva while fighting with Kṛṣṇa in defence of Bāṇa; chopping of Bāṇa's arms in the battle; killing of Naraka the king of Prāgjyotiṣa and taking away of the girls detained by him.

39. The killing of Śiśupāla, Pauṇḍraka, Śālva and of the wicked-minded Dantavakra; the destruction of the monkey Dvivida, Pīṭha, Mura and Pañcajanas and others.

40. The power of the above kings and demons and their slaying; burning of the city of Vārāṇasī; lightening of the burden of the earth by making the Pāṇḍavas as his instruments.

(Here ends the Tenth Skandha)

41. The complete destruction of his own race under the pretext of Brāhmaṇa's curse; the wonderful dialogue between Uddhava and Vāsudeva.

42. In that dialogue, the entire range of the science of Ātman as well as the decisions regarding the duties of various classes of society and the stages in life (Varnas and Āśramas); the Lord's withdrawal from the mortal vision by the power of Yoga.

(Here ends the eleventh Skandha)

43. The characteristics of the four Yugas and the conduct of the public in them; perversity of men in the Kali age, four types of deluges (Pralaya), three types of creations.

44. Casting off his body by the intelligent royal sage Parikṣit, the classification of Vedas into different branches by the sage Vyāsa, the sacred story of Mārkaṇḍeya. The disposition of the limbs and weapons of Supreme Person and the ruler of the world as the Sun-god.

45. In this way, O great Brāhmaṇas, whatever I have been asked by you about the sportive activities, incarnations and other acts of the Lord have been described to you by me in all details.

46. A person who involuntarily and unintentionally utters loudly "Salutations to Hari" while falling (in a well, etc.), stumbling (on a staircase, etc.), being afflicted or after sneezing, become rid of all sins.

47. It is the experience of saintly persons that when his name or praise is devoutly chanted or his glory is listened to with devotion, the Infinite, glorious Lord enters their heart and definitely shakes off cleanly and completely all the sins, just as the sun dispels darkness or (if you doubt the sun's ability to reach inside caves or cavities the Lord does so) like the tempestuous winds scattering the clouds.

48.* They are indeed futile utterances and unrighteous stories (leading to hell) which do not speak of Lord Viṣṇu (who is above sense-perception). That alone is (how really happy it is to state that) alone is auspicious and meritorious which extol the Lord's excellent attributes.

* GS alternately explains : The stories which do not deal with the theme of the Lord may be true but are fruitless. They may be interesting but they incur sin and are the cause of hell. The stories of good persons (not related with the Lord) are also devoid of merit and the narrator though

49. That alone is beautiful and attractive (even it be like the Lord's entry in the bear Jāmbavān's den); that alone is sweet (though unpalatable to devotees such as Rāma's abandonment of Sītā); that alone is ever fresh giving newer delights every time (although the incident or the theme is age-old); that alone is the eternal festivity and source of joy to the mind (even if it be painful like the abduction of Sītā by Rāvaṇa); that alone is the means of drying up the ocean of grief of human beings even though it creates non-attachment towards close relatives like husband or son).

50.* The speech composed of words with rhetorical beauty but which seldom describes the world purifying glory of Hari, is regarded like a pleasure worthy of enjoyment for worldly persons, where pure-minded ascetics who dwell in (are merged in the Supreme Spirit (Brahman) never like to stay, like swans from the Mānasa lake, who have beautiful dwelling places, do not find pleasure in pools that are the pleasure resorts of crows alone. Where there is Lord Hari, there are the pure sinless saints.

51. That out-flow of words which though not properly composed in every verse, makes good people (saints) hear, sing, and praise the names (which are as if) imprinted with the glory of the Infinite Lord, destroys the sins of the people.

52. Knowledge, (though) actionless and pure, (if) devoid of devotion to the imperishable Lord (Viṣṇu) does not appear sufficiently bright (i.e. does not result in proper. "direct" knowledge. And how can again the action which is always unblissful, even though (performed) without any desire of its fruit, appear expressing the truth in sweet words is not a pious story-teller. On the other hand, imaginary stories glorifying the Lord are 'True'. Though they are ruinous to the house-holder stage, they are auspicious. Stories of the Lord abducting the wives of others told by low-minded people are also meritorious as they describe the excellence of the Lord (Bhagavataḥ para-dārāharaṇādikam adhamair opuṇyatvena kathitam api tadeva puṇyam yatas tad bhagavato guṇasyaiva na tu doṣasya udayo yasmāt * Verses 50, 51, and 52 are practically the same as supra 1.5.10,11,12. Thus repetition is made at the beginning and the end of the Bh. P. to establish emphatically the greatness of Bhakti (devotion), just as the bījas of a great mantra are uttered at its beginning and end—GS : VD.

bright (i.e. will have purificatory effect if it is not dedicated to God).

53. The exertions undergone for carrying out the prescribed religious duties pertaining to one's Varna (class in society) and Āśrama (stage in life), penance, Vedic studies, etc. are for the sake of reputation or affluence. But by singing of and listening to the excellences of the lotus-feet of Śrīdhara (Lord Viṣṇu) unfailing remembrance thereof is ensured.

54. Non-forgetfulness (i.e. constant memory) of the lotus-feet of Lord Kṛṣṇa annihilates all evils and inauspiciousness; it deepens the tranquillity of the mind and enhances mental purity and devotion to the Supreme Soul; it promotes spiritual knowledge along with self-knowledge and dispassion.

55. Highly fortunate you are, O prominent Brāhmaṇas, in that you have enthroned in your heart the supreme Nārāyaṇa to whom no other god is superior and who is the Inner Controller of all beings and worship him with constant devotion.

56. I have also been reminded of the lucid enlightenment of (the knowledge about) the nature of the soul in the (Bhāgavata Purāṇa) which I heard from the lips of the great sage Śrī Śuka in the assembly of those great sages who assembled to listen to it, when king Parīkṣit determined to observe his vow to fast unto death.

57. O Brāhmaṇas ! In this way has been narrated to you the great glory of Lord Vāsudeva whose exploits are worthy of being recounted, as it exterminates all evils and inauspiciousness.

58. He who with concentrated attention, and faith and devotion recounts this (Bhāgavata Purāṇa) continuously (every day) or for a period of three hours or for a minute and he who listens to it with faith and devotion purifies his inner soul (and not the physical body as in a bath).

59. He who hears it on the twelfth or eleventh day of every fortnight of the lunar month, will be blest with longevity; while he who reads it with devotion observing a fast (all the while) absolves himself of all sins.

60. Observing fast and exercising all the while perfect self-control, a person who reads this compilation (of the Bhāga- vata Purāṇa) at holy places like Puṣkara, Mathurā and Dvārakā, is freed from the fear of Saṁsāra.

61 The gods, sages, siddhas, manes (ancestors), Manus and Kings bestow all the desired boons and the objects on a person who chants it, listens to the chanting or glorifies it.

62. A Brāhmaṇa who reads this Purāṇa gains the same blessings technically (by the ancients as) “streams of ghee, honey and milk”, as one who gets after studying the Vedas (Ṛg-veda, Sāmaveda and Yajurveda).

63. O Brāhmaṇas ! A person who, with a controlled and pure mind, studies this compilation called the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, attains to that supreme abode (Mokṣa or Vaikuṇṭha) which the Lord described (in this Purāṇa) as a fruit of it.

64. On studying this compilation of the Bhāgavata, a Brāhmaṇa gets insight into spiritual knowledge (known as ṛtambharā prajñā) a Kṣatriya attains sovereignty over the whole earth engirdled by the seas; a Vaiśya becomes the Lord of wealth (like Kubera) while a Śūdra is absolved of sins.

65. Lord Viṣṇu, the Supreme Ruler of all, who is the destroyer of the mass of sins and impurities of the Kali age, is not so often extolled and sung in other Purāṇas. But on the contrary, in this Purāṇa, the glorious God who abides in all (the universe) has been glorified at every step, as the occasion of the stories (about him) demanded it (or is sung in every account of this work.)

66. I bow to Lord Acyuta who is unborn and endless or infinite, the principle of consciousness (or the Supreme Self), the embodiment of the power that is capable of creating, sustaining and dissolving the universe, and who is so great that rulers of heaven like gods Brahmā, Indra, Rudra, and others cannot eulogise him with proper comprehension.

67. Salutations to that eternal Lord, the God of gods whose essential nature is absolute, pure consciousness, who, through the instrumentalities of his nine potencies (viz. Prakṛti, Puruṣa, Mahat, Ahaṅkāra and five tan-mātrās) has evolved in himself the abode for all mobile and immobile beings.

68. I humbly bow down to Śukācārya, the son of Vyāsa, who destroys all sins Śuka—whose mind was firmly established in the Supreme bliss of ātman, and has hence given up the notion of difference and diversity, but whose heart was fascinated and attracted by the stories of the sportive acts of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the unconquerable, and who out of grace extended this Purāṇa which is a light unto the Truth about him.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

*The extent of Each of the Eighteen Purāṇas :
The Glory of the Bhāgavata.*

Sūta said :

1. Salutations to the Almighty Lord whom gods Brahmā, Varuṇa, Indra and Maruts extol with divine hymns; whom the Sāma-chanters sing by Vedas and their Angas,<sup>1</sup> according to the Pada and Krama methods, and by the Upaniṣads; whom the Yogis visualize with their mind absorbed in him through deep meditation and whose end (the entire truth about whom could not be fathomed by the hosts of gods and demons.

2. May you be protected by the breaths (lit. wind created by the inhalation and exhalation of air while breathing) of the Lord who assumed the form of a divine tortoise and fell a-dozing as he (his back) was being scratched and consequently soothed by the ends of the rocks of mount Mandara revolving on it (as it moved while churning the ocean for nectar). As an effect of the still unexhausted impetus communicated by the (ingoing and out-coming) breaths, there take place flow-tide and ebb-tide, and constant rise and fall of waters ceaselessly continue and the sea has no respite.

3. Now you learn from me the number of verses in each Purāṇa and their total number and the main theme and the object of the Purāṇa concerned. Hear from me the procedure

1. Angas: accessories of the Veda, viz. Śikṣā (phonetics) Kalpa (Pertaining to the rituals and prescription of rules for ceremonial and sacrificial, Vyākaraṇa (Grammar), Chandas (Prosody), Jyotiṣa (Astronomy), Nirukta (Etymology) to be followed in gifts (of the copy of the Bhāgavata), the importance of giving it and also of reading or reciting it, etc.

4. The Brahma Purāṇa consists of ten thousand verses (Ślokas), the Padma Purāṇa, fifty thousand, Viṣṇu Purāṇa twenty-three thousand and Śaiva i.e., Śiva Purāṇa, twentyfour thousands.

5. Śrīmad Bhāgavata contains ten and eight (eighteen) thousand Ślokas (verses); the Nārada, twentyfive thousand; the Mārkaṇḍeya, nine thousand, the Agni fifteen thousand and four hundred verses.

6. The Bhaviṣya Purāṇa is comprised of fourteen thousand and five hundred verses; The Brahma Vaivarta Purāṇa, eighteen thousands, the Liṅga Purāṇa, e even thousands.

7. The Varāha Purāṇa contains twentyfour thousand, the Skanda Purāṇa, eighty one thousand, one hundred verses, and the Vāmana, eleven thousands.

8. The Kūrma Purāṇa consists of seventeen thousands; the Matsya Purāṇa, fourteen thousands. The Garuḍa Purāṇa, nineteen thousand verses, while the Brahmāṇḍa has twelve thousand Ślokas.

9. Thus the extent (the total number of verses) of the Purāṇic compilations is four lakhs i.e. four hundred thousands out of which Śrīmad Bhāgavata contains eighteen thousands.

10. It was due to his graciousness that this Purāṇa was at first revealed by Lord Viṣṇu to god Brahmā who was sitting on a lotus grown out of Viṣṇu's navel and was afraid of Saṁsāra.

11. The Śrīmad Bhāgavata contains, at the beginning, in the middle and at the end, discourse on the value of dispassion. It has been giving delight to pious persons as well as to celestials with the nectar of numerous episodes, glorifying the sportive activities of Lord Hari.

12. Its main theme is the quintessence of all the Upaniṣads (which form the last division of the Vedic texts) which is characterised by (the declaration of) complete one-ness, identity between the absolute Brahman and the ātman (Paramā-tman). It is one without a second. And its only object is to secure Mokṣa.

13. He who, on the full moon day of Bhādrapada, offers as a gift a copy of the Bhāgavata placing it on a throne of gold, attains to the highest abode.

14. Other Purāṇas impress (lit. spread their lustre) in the assembly of the righteous, so long as this great and glorious work called Bhāgavata does not appear there.

15. Śrīmad Bhāgavata is really accepted by all as the essence of all the Upaniṣads. He who is satiated by drinking deep into the sweet nectar (of its teaching) does not find delight and interest in any other thing.

16. Just as the Gaṅgā is the foremost and the holiest among rivers, or Lord Viṣṇu, among gods or as god Śiva among the devotees of Viṣṇu (Śiva is the greatest devotee of Viṣṇu) the same is the position of Śrīmad Bhāgavata among Purāṇas.

17. O Brāhmaṇas! Just as the holy place Kāśī is unexcelled in all the sacred places, similarly, out of all the Purāṇas, there is no Purāṇa which can equal (much less surpass in excellence) Śrīmad Bhāgavata.

18. (This) Śrīmad Bhāgavata is a Purāṇa without any blemish. It is so dear to the devotees of Śrī Viṣṇu. In it has been glorified lucidly and sweetly, the pure knowledge symbolizing the Supreme Brahman as characterised by Reality, consciousness and bliss, which is free from any taint of Māyā and is attainable only to the Paramahamsas—ascetics of the highest order. In this has been clearly elucidated withdrawal from and hence cessation of all Karmas accompanied with spiritual knowledge, renunciation and intense devotion (to God). He who with a devoted heart listens to it, reads it constantly, and is given to contemplate over it, is liberated (from Samsāra).

19. Let us meditate upon that supreme Spirit who is real, absolutely pure (unsullied by Māyā), free from impurities, untouched by sorrow, free from birth and death and hence eternal—that Supreme Spirit (manifested in the form of Nārāyaṇa) graciously revealed this incomparable Light of knowledge (in the form of Śrīmad Bhāgavata) to god Brahmā formerly, at the beginning of creation, and through him, he passed it on to the divine Sage Nārada, and through him to the sage Kṛṣṇa (Dvaipāyana), and through him to the most prominent Yogin, Śrī Śuka and through him to king Parīkṣit (Viṣṇurāta) out of compassion and grace for him.

20. Hail to the glorious Lord Vāsudeva who is the witness (to everything), who out of grace narrated this Bhāgavata to god Brahmā who was desirous of Mokṣa (Liberation from Saṁsāra).

21. Salutations to the sage Śuka, the Lord of Yogīs who is the embodiment of Brahman, who enabled king Parīkṣit bitten by the serpent in the form of Saṁsāra to attain liberation from Saṁsāra.

22. O Almighty Lord, God of gods, you are our protector. Be pleased to direct us that way so that (unflinching) devotion to your feet may be engendered (in our hearts) in every birth (of ours).

23. I bow to that Supreme Hari, loud chanting and glorification of whose name completely annihilates all sins, and salutation to whom relieves one of all woes and miseries.

APPENDIX

Marāṭhī Commentators of the Bh. P.

(A Note)

In translating the X and XI Skandhas of the Bh. P., I have freely utilised two standard commentaries in Marathi—KD. or Kṛṣṇa Dayārṇava's Harivaradā on the X Skandha, and EK. or Ekanātha's Ekākāra Ṭikā on the XI Skandha.

Maharashtra has a long tradition of the study and interpretation of the Bh. P. — even before ŚR, as ŚR. respectfully mentions Bopadeva (13th Cent A.D.) from Maharashtra. There are two schools of interpreting the Bh. P.—the orthodox, the early exponent of which is Bopadeva and this school is represented by a number of Maratha saints like Ekanātha, Bahirā (Bhairava) Jātaveda, Jani Janārdana, Śiva Kalyāṇa, Kṛṣṇa Dayārṇava and others ; the other School is that of the Mahānubhāva sect like Bhāskara Bhaṭṭa (author of 'Uddhava Gītā') and others.

The most famous commentator of the orthodox school was EK. (Ekanātha) Circa 1533—1599 A.D. This scholar saint—social reformer of the 16th Cent. A.D. was not only the greatest writer of his time, but even to-day, he is second to Jñāneśvara in the realm of Marathi literature. EK. lived at Paṭhaṇ, the ancient capital of Maharashtra of the Sātavāhana period. He adorned whatever he touched. He took the romantic episode of the marriage of Kṛṣṇa and Rukmiṇī from the Bh. P. and his Rukmiṇī Svayamvara is still unsurpassed and girls who wish to get their marriage settled at the earliest still read it devoutly. Kṛṣṇa Dayārṇava, the most famous commentator on the X Skandha of the Bh. P. has bodily incorporated the whole of this work (Rukmiṇī Svayamvara) out of respect for EK., his spiritual predecessor. EK. wrote a number of Vedāntic treatises. But his magnum opus is his commentary on the XI Skandha of the Bh. P. He explained each and every verse of the XI Skandha in 18,000 Ovi verses in Marathi. The Pandits of Benares where EK. wrote this commentary in 1573 A.D.

warmly appreciated this work. As the legend goes (as in the case of ŚR's Com. on the Bh. P.) EK's commentary was adjudged as the best by the presiding deity of Benares.

Though EK. pays high tributes to ŚR, he differs from him on many points, a few of which are recorded in the footnotes here. EK's commentary is a synthesis of philosophy and poetry presented to the masses in chaste, lucid Marathi. None of the fifteen SK commentators of different schools of Vedānta (published in the Bhāgavata Vidyapeeth Ahmedabad's edition) could surpass him in the flight of imagination and felicity of expression. It is a fond dream of the present writer to render it into English for non-Marathi knowing readers.

EK. wrote a voluminous work on the Rāmāyaṇa. His allegorical description of the various customs and classes of society, known as Bhāruḍa is sociologically important.

EK. practised the teaching of Bh. P. and is still respected as a great saint in Maharashtra.

Kṛṣṇa Dayārṇava (KD.)

KD. (1674-1740 A.D.), the author of the monumental Marathi commentary, Harivaradā (42,000 verses in the Ovi metre) on the X Skandha, is a spiritual descendant of EK. KD's spiritual genealogy is as follows :—

Ekanātha→Cidānanda→Svānanda Svāmi→Govinda Guru→Kṛṣṇa Dayārṇava. His Original name was Narahari, but his habit of loudly remembering God as “Kṛṣṇa Dayārṇava” led people to re-christen him as KD. His two immediate (spiritual) predecessors were important officers in the service of Śivājī the founder of the Maratha Kingdom and his son Sambhājī (1680-89 A.D.). KD. himself had to go through the fiery ordeal of Aurangzeb's ruthless attempt to crush the newly founded Hindu Kingdom till his (Aurangzeb's) death in 1707 A.D.

KD. does not state how far he is indebted to his Maratha pūrvā sūris like Bahirā (Bhairava) Jātaveda, Śiva-Kalyāṇa who wrote 25,806 Ovi-verses and 1,25,000 Ovi verses respectively on the X Skandha, and it is difficult to ascertain it as the

KD. began to write this commentary at the age of fifty-four, as he was advised to sing of the Lord as a remedy for his serious Malady. And like the ancient EK. poet Mayūra, he was cured of it by the time he completed the first half of the X Skandha. Harivarada reflects a high standard of achievement in blending poetry with philosophy and other disciplines then current in Maharashtra.

KD. completed X. 87.23 of the Bh.P. and passed away on 13th November 1740. The remaining portion was completed by his disciple Uttama-Śloka in 1743.

SANĀTANA GOSVĀMĪ (SG.)

SG. and his brother Rūpa Gosvāmī belong to the Gauḍīya school of Vaiṣṇavism. They were Brahmins from Karnatak in the South, who attained influential official positions in the Muslim Court of Gauḍa with a muslim title. This led some scholars to believe that they were muslim converts. But as S. K. De points out, "The stupendous Śāstric learning as well as the Vaiṣṇava disposition of the two brothers undoubtedly prompted Caitanya to select them as the apologists of his faith" (Vaiṣṇava Faith and Movement, P. 73 Foot note 2). The contribution of SG. in building up the Gauḍīya School of Vaiṣṇavism is substantial. Unfortunately his commentary on the Bh. P. is published in the Bengali script. I had to depend on the excerpts of SG. published in the Devanāgarī script in the Vrindavan edition of the X Skandha. And even the excerpts testify to the great scholarship of SG. In the interest of the understanding of Gauḍīya Vaiṣṇavism in other parts of India, one wishes the Gosvāmīs of Vrindavan to bring out a Devanāgarī edition of SG.'s work.
